Labor dispute puts students in middle

State system strained by decline in public support

BY DEBRA ERDLEY
 Chad Dobbins was worried. An email from a professor in his MBA program at Clarion University of Pennsylvania had an ominous ring to the 38-year-old Brookline father of two. The message warned that university faculty could strike beginning Wednesday if state and union negotiators failed to reach a new contract agreement. The two sides resumed a three-day bargaining session Friday.
 "If there's a strike, and they stay out, I won't get my funding," Dobbins said of the loan financing his online studies while he works as a construction project manager.

His loan terms require that he take at least six credits each semester. A condensed, seven-week course worth 1.5 credits — which would bring him to that threshold — is scheduled to begin Oct. 24.
 "I'm sweating it a little," Dobbins said from a work site in Texas. About 5,500 faculty members and coaches at Pennsylvania's 14 state-owned universities have worked without a contract since June 30, 2015. Both sides announced Saturday that they had reached agreement on at least one point: No one would comment on the ongoing negotiations, expected to last through Sunday, "to help minimize distractions," according to a joint statement. Experts say the increasingly tense labor dispute threatening to disrupt classes for Dobbins and more than 104,000 other students at state-system schools — including California, Clarion, Edinboro, Indiana and Slippery Rock universities in Western Pennsylvania — is just the most-recent symptom of changes that began rolling across campuses nationwide several decades ago. Shifts in underwriting the costs of college triggered the change, said William A. Herbert, executive director of

Alleged terror plot targeted Muslims

3 members of Kansas group accused of plan to ignite religious war

THE WASHINGTON POST
 The "Crusaders" knew they wanted to kill Muslims — and with luck, use the "bloodbath" to start a religious war — but for months, they couldn't settle on a plan.

The easiest way would be to grab guns, go to the predominantly Somali-Muslim apartment complex they'd been surveilling and start kicking in doors, court documents said. They would spare no one, not even babies. In the end, they decided to set off bombs similar to the one Timothy McVeigh used in 1995 to kill 168 people in Oklahoma City. They planned to strike after the Nov. 8 election, investigators said. Curtis Allen, Gavin Wright and Patrick Eugene Stein face federal charges of conspiring to use a weapon of mass destruction to blow up an apartment complex, a mosque and Muslim immigrants from Somalia, the Department of Justice announced.

Federal court documents reveal how the trio's hatred and Islamophobia coalesced into a plan for domestic terrorism. It was ultimately undone by an FBI confidential informant and Allen's girlfriend, who showed authorities Allen's supply room after he allegedly hit her during a fight. Earlier this year, investigators were tipped off by the informant, who had attended meetings of a group calling itself the Crusaders. Allen, Wright and Stein were the leaders and the chief architects of the plan, investigators say. The informant said the group's focus was an apartment complex in Garden City, Kan., that had an apartment-turned-mosque attended by Muslims from Somalia. The Crusaders referred to them as cockroaches. "They chose the target location based on their hatred of Sabha Al-Ali, 28, practices one of her favorite English phrases, a scrum of kids circling her in their cramped apartment in Pittsburgh's Crafton Heights neighborhood. She hasn't learned a lot of English yet, but what she knows is important. "I'm alive. My babies are alive," she says. Motab, her 31-year-old husband, stands next to her, taking turns playing with their children: Mohammed, 8; Shadid, 6; Najdah, 4; Ahmed, 3; Hassan, 2; and baby Iman, born in Pittsburgh in February — the only family member who is an American citizen.

They're Sunni refugees from the war-torn Syrian city of Aleppo. They arrived here shortly before Christmas 2015, a handful of the 13,000 who arrived nationwide before the end of September. "Every day, they bombed," said Motab, pointing on a map to his home neighborhood of Al-Ansari, its blocks reduced to rubble by barrel bombs dropped by the aircraft of President Bashar Al-Assad's regime. "They bombed the airport. Bombed the hospital," he said. "No bread, no diesel." Over the past 12 months, Allegheny, Beaver and Washington counties absorbed without incident 139 Syrian refugees, including this family, according to the Pennsylvania Refugee Resettlement Program. They're the lucky ones. The civil war in Syria has claimed more than 400,000 lives and left 12 million citizens internally displaced or cast out as refugees, according to the United Nations. Motab and Sabha realize they and their children unwittingly have become political fodder in the American presidential election. Trump says race rigged, fueled by lies

ASSOCIATED PRESS
 PORTSMOUTH, N.H. — A beleaguered Donald Trump sought to undermine the legitimacy of the presidential election Saturday, pressing unsubstantiated claims the contest is rigged against him, vowing anew to jail Hillary Clinton if he's elected and throwing in a baseless insinuation his rival was on drugs in the last debate. Not even the country's more than two centuries of peaceful transitions of political leadership were sacrosanct as Trump accused the media and the Clinton campaign of conspiring against him to undermine a free and fair election. "The election is being rigged by corrupt media pushing completely false allegations and outright lies in an effort to elect her president," he said, referring to the several women who have come forward in recent days to say that Trump had groped or sexually assaulted them. He has denied the claims, calling the women liars.

Earlier Saturday, Trump took to Twitter to warn that "100% fabricated and made-up charges, pushed strongly by the media and the Clinton Campaign, may poison the minds of the American Voter. FIX!" "Hillary Clinton should have been prosecuted and should be in jail," he added. "Instead she is running for president in what looks like a rigged election." In a country with a history of peaceful political transition, his challenge to the election's legitimacy — as a way to explain a loss in November, should that happen — was a striking rupture of faith in American democracy. Trump has repeatedly claimed without offering evidence that election fraud is a serious problem and encouraged

"When you are on the other side," his mother, Crystal Mees, recalls telling him, "you are going to see Mommy cry a lot. It's not because she's mad. It's because she misses you."

And this: "It's not your fault." But whose fault was it? Bryson shot himself last January with a .22-caliber Derringer his grandmother kept under the bed. It was an accident, but one that could be blamed on many factors, from his grandmother's negligence to the failure of government and industry to find ways to prevent his death and

Afghan Taliban threatens provincial capitals

THE WASHINGTON POST

With winter approaching in Afghanistan, Taliban militants there seem more determined than ever to expand their influence across the country.

On Friday, the NATO-led mission in Afghanistan announced that it was sending Western advisers to Farah province, a rural area just northwest of Helmand Province, to buoy Afghan soldiers there battling the insurgent group.

The newfound Western presence in Farah comes roughly a week after Taliban fighters began making concerted efforts to seize the city of Farah, the capital of the province. Around the same time, the Taliban began offensives near Helmand's provincial capital of Lashkar Gah and managed to enter the northern city of Kunduz before being pushed back to the city's outskirts after more than a week of heavy fighting.

"What we believe we're seeing right now is the Taliban trying to make an effort before the end of the year to achieve their 2016 strategic objective of capturing a provincial capital," said Brig. Gen. Charles Cleveland, the spokesman for the U.S. mission in Afghanistan, in an email.

It is unclear how many advisers are heading to Farah, but Resolute Support, the name of the NATO-led Afghanistan mission, tweeted that it had sent an "expeditionary advisory package," or group of soldiers and advisers, to the embattled province.

There are currently such groups deployed to Lashkar Gah and Tarin Kowt, the capital of Uruzgan Province. In Lashkar Gah, the team includes roughly 50 soldiers and a small contingent of advisers. While military officials bill the advisory packages as a means to assist embattled Afghan security forces with on-the-ground guidance, the U.S. troops provide more of a "placebo effect," said one U.S. adviser.

U.S. forces have also been propping up Afghan security forces with hundreds of airstrikes against the Taliban. In June, the Obama administration granted expanded authorities for airstrikes in Afghanistan, allowing U.S. forces to target the Taliban to provide "strategic effects" on the battlefield. In reality, the effects have done just enough to keep the Taliban from holding key territory — such as a district center — for an extended amount of time. Before the summer decision, U.S. air power had been relegated to going after terrorist targets and supporting the defense of U.S. Special Operations forces throughout the country.

Though unannounced at the time, the new strike permissions were meant to be a temporary boost for the Afghan security forces as they fought into the fall. However, according to senior military and administration officials, the airstrikes will continue.

Despite the widening of U.S. air support, the White House believes that the war in Afghanistan is tipping in the Taliban's favor. Speaking on the condition of anonymity to speak frankly about Afghanistan's deteriorating security situation, a senior administration official called the situation in the country an "eroding stalemate."

In 2017, U.S. forces will draw down from 9,800 troops to approximately 8,400. With little mention in the recent presidential debates, it is unclear how the next administration will handle the next stage of the United States' war in Afghanistan.

U.S. aid worker kidnapped in Niger, official says

Resident of country since 1992 reportedly taken toward Mali

ASSOCIATED PRESS

BAMAKO, Mali — Gunmen stormed the house of a longtime American aid worker in Niger, killing two people before fleeing with the man toward the border with Mali, authorities said Saturday.

It is believed to be the first time an American citizen has been abducted in the vast Sahel region, where al-Qaida and criminal gangs have targeted French nationals and other Europeans for more than a decade, demanding millions of dollars for their release.

"We are aware of reports of the kidnapping of a U.S. citizen in Niger," a State Department official said after the abduction late Friday. "The U.S. Department of State has no higher priority than the safety and security of U.S. citizens overseas."

The U.S. Embassy in Niger issued an emergency message for U.S. citizens Saturday, warning that "the threat of kidnapping and hostage taking continues to be very high" and encouraging people to "take appropriate security precautions and to avoid predictable travel patterns."

There was no immediate claim of responsibility, though al-Qaida-linked terrorists have abducted foreigners in Niger and brought them to northern Mali before.

The government of Niger said in a news release Saturday that the American had lived there since 1992.

"These criminals are currently en route toward Mali and our forces are pursuing them," the interior ministry said in its statement. "The president of the republic is personally following the situation and our forces are fully mobilized to capture them and put an end to this disastrous affair."

Gov. Daouda Maiga, governor of Mali's Menaka region bordering Niger, said authorities there were alerted to be on the lookout for a white Toyota Hilux, a vehicle often used by jihadists in the region.

The abduction took place in Abalak, in the Tahoua region of Niger. About a week ago, 22 people were killed in a refugee camp about 155 miles away.

A number of foreigners remain hostages in the Sahel region, including a Swiss woman and a South African-British dual national, both seized in separate attacks in Timbuktu, Mali. In Burkina Faso, an Australian doctor and a Romanian man are being held captive.

INDIA 24 killed in stampede ahead of Hindu ceremony

LUCKNOW — At least 24 people were killed and 20 injured in a stampede that occurred as they were crossing a crowded bridge to reach a Hindu religious ceremony in northern India on Saturday, police said.

The stampede took place on the outskirts of Varanasi, a city in Uttar Pradesh state known for its temples. Organizers were expecting 3,000 devotees at the ceremony, but more than 70,000 thronged the ashram of a local Hindu leader on the banks of the Ganges River, police officer S.K. Bhagat said.

"We were not prepared for such a large crowd," Raj Bahadur, a spokesman for the organizers, told The Associated Press.

The stampede happened as police started turning back people from the overcrowded bridge, the Press Trust of India news agency cited Bahadur as saying. That triggered a rumor among the devotees that the bridge had collapsed, and they started running for safety, he said.

Nineteen people were killed on the spot and five succumbed to their injuries at a hospital, said police officer Daljit Chaudhary. Four of the 20 injured people were still in serious condition at the hospital, he said.

Agnew Meyer also was found with a small amount of cocaine and several pounds of silver coins. He puts the value of the gold alone at more than $1.5 million.

Delgadillo says the man is being investigated for possible smuggling, though he has not been charged.

Police didn't say Saturday where Meyer is from or how long he's been living in Bolivia.

SPAIN Cave etchings 14,500 years old found in north

MADRID — More than 50 cave etchings thought to be around 14,500 years old have been found in the northern Spanish town of Lekeitio.

Bizkaia regional official Unai Rementería announced the discovery in a press conference Thursday, saying the etchings were a "treasure of mankind," and "of exceptional technical quality and visibility." He said experts have praised the etchings as the "most spectacular" in the Iberian peninsula.

Among the figures carved into the stone surface are horses, bison, goats and, for the first time, at least two lions.

The region of Bizkaia neighbors the region of Cantabria, home to the famous Altamira cave paintings, Spain's most prized prehistoric cave art site — also known as the Sistine Chapel of Paleolithic Art.

RUSSIA Guards fire on N. Korean ship, kill 1 fisherman

The Federal Security Service, which includes coastal and border guards, says the clash took place Saturday after the trawler Dae Yong No. 10 entered Russian waters in the Sea of Japan.

The security service, known by its acronym FSB, said in a statement that border guards detained the boat and found "illegally obtained aquatic bio-resources."

The statement says the ship then attempted to flee while its crewmembers tried to wrest weapons from the Russian guards. A Russian coast guard ship fired at the trawler's propulsion system, disabling it, and on the North Korean crewmen, the statement said.

MEXICO Zapatista rebels to field a presidential candidate

MEXICO CITY — Mexico's Zapatista National Liberation Army says it will choose an indigenous woman as its independent candidate for the country's 2018 presidential election.

The rebels say in a Friday statement they will begin consultations to select the candidate. The group did not participate in Mexico's past elections.

The 2018 presidential contest will be the first to allow independent candidates not aligned with a political party.

The Zapatistas rose up on Jan. 1, 1994, in the southern state of Chiapas to demand rights for indigenous people.

The group was known for its leader Subcomandante Marcos, since re-baptized Galeano. He and the other rebels hid their identities with ski masks.

While the rebels never abandoned their arms, they have not used them since the uprising and later signed a peace accord with the government.

Navy commissions ship fit for Batman

ASSOCIATED PRESS

BALTIMORE — If Batman had a warship, it would be the USS Zumwalt. That's how Adm. Harry Harris, commander of the U.S. Pacific Command, described the Navy's largest and most sophisticated new destroyer, which comes with a price tag of at least $4.4 billion.

"As long as our president and you the American people have an insatiable appetite for security, than I have an insatiable appetite for the stuff to underwrite that security," Harris said at the ship's commissioning ceremony on Saturday.

Ray Mabus, secretary of the Navy, called the Zumwalt "a quantum leap" for Navy ships.

"It's the first of a kind that's leading the way for new classes of ships, new capabilities that are in ships, new systems that we can use and it just expands the things we can do and the ways we do it," Mabus said after the ceremony.

$4.4 billion stealth destroyer Zumwalt is 'quantum leap' for maritime clout

Here are some other details about the guided missile destroyer:

Stealth

The 610-foot-long warship is sleek, with an angular shape to minimize its radar signature. It looks like a much smaller vessel on radar: Quieter than other ships, the Zumwalt is hard to detect, track and attack. A composite deckhouse hides radar and other sensors. Its powerful new gun system can unload 600 rocket-powered projectiles on targets more than 70 miles away.

Power

Weighing nearly 15,000 tons, the ship's advanced technology and capabilities allow it a range of defensive and offensive missions to project power; wherever it is needed. Capt. James Kirk, commanding officer of the Zumwalt, says it generates 78 megawatts of power; "enough power to power a medium- to small-sized city." With a motto of Pax Proctor Vim (Peace Through Power), it's unique capability to generate power could be used in ways perhaps not even envisioned yet, such as in the testing and use of laser and directed-energy weapon systems.

Missiles

The Zumwalt will be able to launch Tomahawk cruise missiles, Evolved

Sea Sparrow Missiles, standard surface-to-air missiles and anti-submarine rockets from 80 missile tubes.

Ride

The Zumwalt also features an unconventional wave-piercing hull that makes its ride "very smooth," said Lt. Cmdr. Nate Chase. "You had no fear of having an open cup of coffee and getting jerked around, like some of these other ships."

Crew

With 147 officers and sailors, the Zumwalt's crew is the smallest of any destroyer built since the 1930s, thanks to extensive automation. All sailors are cross-trained, and there's more sharing of tasks on the Zumwalt. Sailors have staterooms, instead of bunk rooms with dozens of people in them. "So, when they wake up, they wake up to only one or two alarm clocks, not four, not 50," Kirk says.

N. Korean launch fails, U.S. reports

ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — The U.S. military said Saturday it's detected what's being described as a failed missile launch by North Korea.

The launch occurred near the northwestern city of Kusong and the missile is presumed to be a Musudan intermediate-range ballistic missile, according to a Defense Department statement.

The military says the launch was attempted at 11:33 p.m. Friday and that the missile didn't pose a threat to North America. The action brought harsh criticism from the U.S.

"We strongly condemn this and North Korea's other recent missile tests, which violate U.N. Security Council Resolutions explicitly prohibiting North Korea's launches using ballistic missile technology," said Cmdr. Gary Ross, a Pentagon spokesman. He said the U.S. would raise concerns at the U.N.

"Our commitment to the defense of our allies, including the Republic of Korea and Japan, in the face of these threats, is ironclad." Ross said. "We remain prepared to defend ourselves and our allies from any attack or provocation."

North Korea has claimed technical breakthroughs in its goal of developing a long-range nuclear missile capable of reaching the continental United States. South Korean defense officials have said the North doesn't yet have such a weapon.

It's the latest in a series of moves by North Korea aimed apparently at displaying a show of force. As recently as last month, it fired three ballistic missiles off its east coast, timed to get the attention of world leaders including President Barack Obama who were visiting the region for a series of summits. The U.N. Security Council subsequently condemned those North Korean launches and threatened "further significant measures" if it refused to stop its nuclear and missile tests.

North Korea also conducted its fifth nuclear test last month and in all has launched more than 20 ballistic missiles this year, part of its program aimed at improving the delivery system for nuclear weapons. Earlier this year, North Korea successfully launched a Musudan missile in June after several failed attempts.

Obama has vowed to work with the United Nations to tighten sanctions against North Korea, but has also said that the U.S. was still open to dialogue if the government changes course.

The U.S. strategy has largely centered on trying to get China, North Korea's traditional ally, to use its influence to persuade the North to change course. North Korea is continuing missile test launches even as the United Nations Security Council is deliberating a further tightening of sanctions after the September nuclear test.

Previously in August, Japanese and South Korean officials said a medium-range ballistic missile flew about 620 miles and landed near Japan's territorial waters.

Thais flock to palace after king's death

Caretaker to lead nation as heir to throne asks to delay succession while he mourns

ASSOCIATED PRESS

BANGKOK — Tens of thousands of Thai mourners thronged Saturday to the palace complex where King Bhumibol Adulyadej's body is being kept, as the government said a regent would be the caretaker of the monarchy until the crown prince takes over following his father's death.

Dressed in somber black and white, people from all over the country converged at the complex in Bangkok's historic center: Bhumibol died Thursday after prolonged illnesses that had incapacitated many of his organs. He was 88.

But confusion reigned outside the complex as police announced that it was closed for seven days. A while later, the complex gates were opened for people to visit one of the halls. The king's body, which is being kept in another building, will not be revealed to the public for another 15 days, authorities said.

The crowds lining outside since dawn were subdued and orderly despite the swelling numbers. People shared food and handed each other water and wet towels to cope with the tropical heat.

While announcing the king's death, the prime minister had said that the heir apparent, Crown Prince Maha Vajiralongkorn, would ascend the throne. But hours later, he said that the prince did not want to be immediately named king because he wanted more time to grieve along with the rest of the nation. Deputy Prime Minister Wissanu Krea-ngam appeared on television Friday evening to explain that the head of the Privy Council, an advisory body to the king, is automatically the regent until a new monarch is crowned.

There was no official statement that the council's head, 96-year-old Prem Tinsulanonda, had been named regent, creating uncertainty. But Wissanu said an announcement wasn't needed because the process is mandated by Thailand's constitution. Prem, a former prime minister, was one of Bhumibol's principal confidants and has ties to Bhumibol's popular daughter, Princess Maha Chakri Sirindhorn.

For ordinary Thais, the overwhelming focus was on grieving for Bhumibol, not the succession.

"I haven't even started to think about that; I'm still in mourning over the king," said Rakchadaporn Unnankad, a 24-year-old Bangkok office worker. "I left home at 6 a.m. to come here. We were queuing for so long before they told us that we can't go inside the palace. There were people who have been here since 4 or 5 a.m."

"My tears started flowing out of me without my realizing," she said, recalling the news of Bhumibol's death. "I didn't even want to hear the announcement."

Buddhist funeral ceremonies began Friday night after a royal motorcade brought Bhumibol's body from nearby Siriraj Hospital to the Grand Palace complex.

Black female doctor says help rebuffed

Flight attendant sought 'actual physicians' for emergency

THE WASHINGTON POST

Tamika Cross, a physician, was midway through a flight from Detroit to Minneapolis when a passenger emergency sent her into "doctor mode."

Sometime after takeoff, a man two rows in front of her suddenly became unresponsive, she said, and flight attendants called for help.

Cross, an obstetrician and gynecologist, said she flagged down one of the crew members, offering to treat the man.

She got a response she wasn't prepared for.

"Oh no, sweetie, put (your) hand down," Cross recalled the flight attendant saying. "We are looking for actual physicians or nurses or some type of medical personnel, we don't have time to talk to you."

The reason behind the flight attendant's apparent skepticism? Cross says it was because she is black.

Cross described the experience on the flight in an Oct. 9 Facebook post that had been shared more than 34,000 times as of Thursday night. In it, she said she was "sick of being disrespected" as a woman of color in her profession and accused Delta, the flight operator, of "blatant discrimination."

Delta said it has reached out to Cross about what happened. In multiple comments from the official Delta Facebook account, the company said the incident "does not reflect the Delta culture. We condemn discrimination toward our customers."

Cross' story calls up other incidents in which black professionals claim to have been racially profiled. Over the summer, Sen. Tim Scott, R-S.C., made waves with a speech from the Senate floor in which he recounted being questioned by police because of his race. And in a now-famous confrontation, Harvard professor Henry Louis Gates Jr. was arrested by a white police officer at his house in Cambridge, Mass.

What happened to Cross had nothing to do with law enforcement. In her case, she said she felt profiled not because of what she looked like but because of what she didn't look like.

It started, Cross said, when a woman ahead of her screamed for someone to come help her husband.

"I naturally jumped into doctor mode as no one else was getting up," Cross said in her Facebook post. As she was unbuckling her seat belt, she said, a flight attendant told people on the plane to stay calm, that the passenger was just having a "night terror."

But moments later the man became unresponsive again. This time, Cross said, the flight crew asked whether there was a physician on board. She said she raised her hand to volunteer, but a flight attendant shut her down.

"I tried to inform her that I was a physician but I was continually cut off by condescending remarks," Cross said.

The crew then said for any physicians on board to press their call buttons, according to Cross. She elaborated:

"I stare at her as I go to press my button. She said 'oh wow you're an actual physician?' I reply yes. She said 'let me see your credentials. What type of Doctor are you? Where do you work? Why were you in Detroit?' (Please remember this man is still in need of help and she is blocking my row from even standing up while Bombarding me with questions).

"I respond 'OBGYN, work in Houston, in Detroit for a wedding, but believe it or not they DO HAVE doctors in Detroit. Now excuse me so I can help the man in need.'"

At that point, Cross said, a white man came up and told the crew he was a physician. The flight attendant sent her back to her seat, saying the man had his "credentials," only to return to her later for advice on how to treat the passenger's low blood pressure, Cross said.

Cross said she felt she was dismissed because she didn't fit the "description of a doctor." The flight attendant apologized and offered her Delta SkyMiles, she said.

"I kindly refused," Cross said. "This is going higher than her. I don't want sky miles in exchange for blatant discrimination."

ISIS bomber strikes Baghdad funeral tent, killing 35

ASSOCIATED PRESS

BAGHDAD — A suicide bomber struck a funeral gathering in Baghdad on Saturday, killing at least 35 people and wounding more than 60, Iraqi police and hospital officials said.

The attack in the Shaab neighborhood occurred around lunchtime, the officials said, speaking on condition of anonymity because they were not authorized to brief the media. The Islamic State group claimed responsibility in a statement carried by its Amaq news agency.

Hussein Khazem, the owner of a nearby clothing warehouse, said the bomber detonated his payload inside a funeral tent, causing a big explosion.

He saw a large number of killed and wounded people, many burning cars and major damage to the local market. The dead included elderly people, children, and some women. He said he closed his shop to help evacuate the wounded and remove the bodies.

"The security situation is not good at all," he said. "These big incidents are happening again, especially in the poorer residential neighborhoods."

Iraq has seen several bombings in recent months, though most have had lower death tolls than Saturday's attack. In July, a massive car bomb in central Baghdad's popular shopping district of Karradah killed about 300 people and forced the resignation of the interior minister.

The attack occurs as Iraqi security forces are preparing for an operation to retake the terrorist-held northern city of Mosul, the country's second largest, from IS.

"All the troops are ready; now they are just waiting for the order from the prime minister," said Maj. Gen. Najim al-Jobori, one of the top Iraqi generals overseeing the Mosul operation.

Police survey the wreckage of a Mazda Miata that was split in half Friday after a collision with a Mercedes-Benz in Rockville Centre on New York's Long Island.

Car split clean in two in N.Y. wreck

Everyone survived crash blamed on man speeding while under influence

ASSOCIATED PRESS

ROCKVILLE CENTRE, N.Y. — A speeding drunken driver smashed into another car on Long Island in New York and split it in half, police said Saturday.

Miraculously, nobody suffered life-threatening injuries in the crash Friday night.

Police said Dustin Brandon, 27, was driving a Mercedes-Benz convertible when it collided with a Mazda Miata in Rockville Centre.

The impact caused the Mercedes to overturn, and the back of the Mazda was sheared off.

Newsday reported that the Mazda's rear tire detached and hit the windshield of a tractor-trailer in a nearby CVS parking lot.

Brandon and his 25-year-old female passenger had to be extricated from the Mercedes. He suffered head and leg injuries. She suffered a lower-leg injury.

The driver of the Mazda suffered internal injuries.

They were all transported to a hospital.

Brandon was arrested on charges of DWI, reckless driving, reckless endangerment, assault and criminal mischief. It wasn't immediately known if he had a lawyer who could comment on

Truck goes off bridge into crowd below; 4 killed

SAN DIEGO — Four people were killed and nine were injured Saturday after an out-of-control pickup truck plunged off the San Diego-Coronado Bridge and plowed into crowd gathered at a festival below, authorities said.

The truck driver, who was alone in the vehicle, struck a guardrail and fell 60 feet before landing on Chicano Park, California Highway Patrol Officer Jake Sanchez said. He was taken to the hospital with major injuries and will be arrested on suspicion of driving under the influence causing deaths and injuries, the officer said.

His name has not been released.

Eight people on the ground were injured. One suffered major trauma, and seven had minor to moderate injuries, said Lee Swanson, a spokesman for the city's Fire-Rescue Department.

Man rushing to hospital to see dad crashes; 2 die

PHILADELPHIA — A motorist, apparently rushing to a Philadelphia hospital to see his injured father, ran a red light, was hit by an SUV and crashed into a utility pole, resulting in the deaths of his two passengers, authorities say.

The 18-year-old driver, who was not identified, was injured in the Friday morning crash and treated for minor injuries, as was the unnamed driver of the sport utility vehicle, police said.

The two killed were identified by authorities as 17-year-old Maggie Lynn Goloff and 19-year-old Osman Zeylnov.

Police said the motorist was apparently rushing to Temple Medical Center to see his father who, hours earlier, had been robbed and assaulted while making a food delivery. The 48-year-old father was delivering pizza to an address in the Nicetown neighborhood of northwest Philadelphia shortly before midnight Thursday when he was flagged down by two men who said they had ordered the food, police said.

One man threatened him with a gun and demanded the food and his belongings. During a struggle for the gun, the victim was struck on the side of the head with the gun before the suspects fled as a police car drove down the street, police said.

2 Boston officers remain in critical condition

BOSTON — Officials say the two Boston police officers shot and wounded remain in criti-

In Twitter posts Saturday, the Boston Police Department said Officer Matt Morris was undergoing surgery at Massachusetts General Hospital.

The department also said that Police Commissioner William Evans visited Officer Richard Cintolo at the hospital Saturday morning and said he was in good spirits. Cintolo had surgery Friday.

It said the department was grateful to the hospital staff for their lifesaving work.

Cintolo and Morris were shot Wednesday night and seriously wounded as they responded to a domestic disturbance. The man who shot them was killed by police.

More than 100 people on Friday evening marched in the East Boston neighborhood where they were shot to honor the officers.

Replica of historic slave ship Amistad reopens

NEW HAVEN — A replica of the historic slave ship Amistad has reopened in Connecticut.

WFSB-TV reports that Gov. Dannel Malloy, New Haven Mayor Toni Harp and others were among those in attendance during a ceremony Saturday in New Haven.

The 129-foot Baltimore clipper is the state's official flag ship. It's a replica of the Amistad, which was taken over by African captives being brought to Cuba in 1839.

The ship became a symbol of America's early anti-slavery movement.

The state spent $2.5 million to build the ship in 1999 and 2000 and about $400,000 a year for operating costs.

The nonprofit group that operated the vessel went into receivership last year.

A new group, Discovering Amistad, then bought the ship for $315,000.

The ship is open for tours on Saturday and Sunday.

Crews try to keep massive wildfire at bay

RENO — Firefighters in Nevada were hoping to stop a wind-driven wildfire, which has already destroyed 22 homes north of Carson City, from jumping any major roads Saturday.

The blaze between Reno and Carson City was only 5 percent contained, fire officials said.

The fire, which grew overnight to more than 5 square miles, was threatening 500 structures and had destroyed 17 outbuildings.

Residents east of Washoe Lake have been allowed to return home. Other neighborhoods have been permitted but told they might have to evacuate again during the weekend. Homes west of the lake will remain under evacuation.

'Mommy died last night': Video shows opioids' toll

Heroin death one of 78 per day claimed in national epidemic

THE WASHINGTON POST

Brenden Clark sat across from his 8-year-old son at a picnic table in northeastern Ohio, preparing to deliver devastating news.

"I've got something to tell you, OK?" he said, reaching across the table to take his son's hand.

The 29-year-old father bowed his head and took a deep breath, then flicked the ashes from a cigarette resting between his fingers.

The young boy, still wearing his backpack after a long day at school, looked anxiously at his grandmother, who was sitting beside him.

"Mommy died last night," Clark told his son. "OK?"

His son, Cameron, stared into his father's face.

"What?" he said.

"Mommy died last night. OK?" Clark repeated, his voice beginning to break. "What do you mean? My mom?" he questioned.

"Yes," Clark said quietly.

"How?" the boy cried out.

"From drugs," Clark said.

The boy fell into his grandmother's arms and let out an agonizing wail. "God!" Clark said, reaching across the table to grab his son.

Seconds later, Clark walked across the picnic table and wrapped his arms around his child.

"I'm so sorry," he told him.

The heart-wrenching scene was captured on camera and posted Monday on Facebook, where it has since been widely shared and watched millions of times — revealing a personal and private moment for a young boy undoubtedly in agony.

The viral video has since struck a nerve both with those who feel for a father hoping to scare other addicts straight and those who believe he took it a step too far.

Clark, who said he is currently recovering from a heroin addiction and has been clean for nearly 100 days, explained that he recorded the video without his son's knowledge because he wanted those in the throes of drug addiction to see how their own children might one day learn their parents had died of an overdose, but asked his son's permission to post it.

Just like that, in an instant, an 8-year-old boy had become the sobbing face of the collateral damage from the nation's opioid epidemic that, each day, claims some 78 lives, according to data from the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention, leaving many children without a parent, sometimes both parents.

"That was my motive in putting it out there — to show the impact it has on our children," Clark said in an exclusive interview with NBC affiliate WFMJ.

Authorities confirmed to The Washington Post that Cameron's mother, 29-year-old Lacy Wood, died of a suspected heroin overdose Sunday in Warren, Ohio, near the Pennsylvania border. A spokeswoman for the Trumbull County coroner said results of toxicology tests to determine the official cause of death are pending.

Clark said that his son had not seen Wood for more than a year because of her addiction but that she had stayed in contact with her son.

Odds of Syrian refugee becoming terrorist 'very, very low' castigated as terrorism risks for months by Republican nominee Donald Trump. He repeatedly has pledged to bar refugees like them — and other Muslims — from entering the United States.

SYRIANS • FROM A1

Trump's running mate, Indiana Gov. Mike Pence, last week lost again in court as the U.S. 7th Circuit Court of Appeals reiterated that Pence cannot block aid to Syrian refugees resettling in Indiana.

Trump's son, Donald Jr., a surrogate on the campaign stump, recently compared Syrian refugees to a bowl of poison-laced Skittles in interviews with the Tribune-Review and other media. Some refugees are safe, but others might be lethal, so none should come, he suggested.

It's an idea that seems crazy to Motab, his Al-Ali kin and three other Syrian refugees interviewed by the Trib.

"Terrorists? The terrorists are taking over Syria," said Motab, pointing on the map to militias loyal to Al Nusra and "Daesh," the pejorative Arabic abbreviation for the Islamic State in Iraq and Syria, or ISIS.

"That's why we came here! We came to escape terrorists!" he said. "I think America is good for me. I'm happy to be here. We're safe, and you're nice people."

Not an easy journey

Fleeing the devastation and encroachment of jihadist militias opposed to the Damascus government, Motab and his family spent five years in a pair of refugee camps in Jordan, the neighboring Arab nation that has taken in nearly 600,000 Syrian refugees.

Daughter Shadid bears the scars of their journey: disfigured flesh running like ivy up her back, caused by a vat of boiling water that fell over in a tent city sprawling across the desert.

With an estimated 65 million people displaced worldwide by violence — the worst humanitarian crisis since World War II — the White

STEPHANIE STRASBURG | TRIBUNE-REVIEW

The Al-Ali family gathers for dinner in their apartment. "I think America is good for me. I'm happy to be here. We're safe, and you're nice people," said Motab, father and husband.

House has urged Congress to resettle 110,000 refugees from across the globe in the new fiscal year that began in October, a tally 29 percent higher than in last fiscal year.

A divided Congress has been reluctant to act. Last year, lawmakers OK'd funding for 75,000 refugees, and President Obama's administration flew in 10,000, forcing federal and state agencies to stretch resources to accommodate their resettlement.

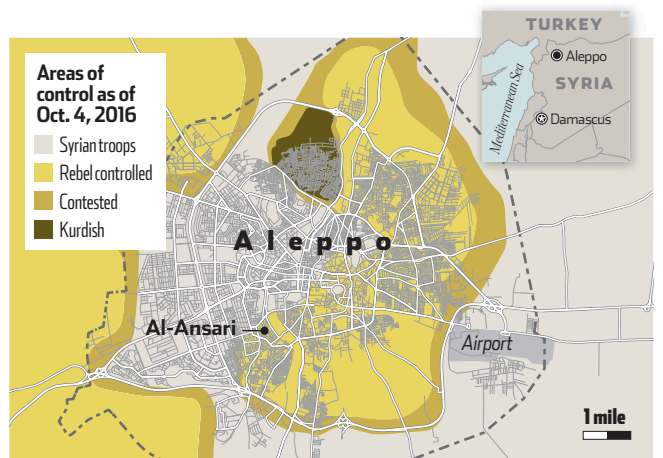

More than 3.2 million refugees from around the world have arrived in America since 1975, many of them Russian Jews escaping the former Soviet Union and people fleeing communist Vietnam, according to the U.S. State Department.

Since 2001, the United States has become a home for more than 800,000 refugees arriving from conflicts or persecution worldwide.

In Allegheny, Beaver and Washington counties, 598 refugees from all conflicts have been resettled — all but 10 in Pittsburgh and surrounding suburban communities.

More vetting

Security and its Citizens and Immigration Services wing.

For those coming from nations like Syria, families must obtain special Security Advisory Opinion clearances from U.S. law enforcement and security and spy agencies before they can be resettled here.

Applicants have their names and biometric information — such as fingerprints — checked against federal and international databases to detect criminals or militants.

"I think that the odds of a Syrian refugee becoming a terrorist are very, very low," said Anne Speckhard, an adjunct psychiatry professor at Georgetown University School of Medicine and director of the International Center for the Study of Violent Extremism.

While "sleeper cells" loyal to ISIS infiltrated Europe alongside tens of thousands of refugees fleeing Syria, they didn't face the same battery of database searches and face-to-face interviews over a long span of time like Motab and his family, Speckhard pointed out.

"But that doesn't mean that some (won't) become radicalized once they're here," she said.

Authorities arrested a pair of Iraqi refugees in 2011 in Kentucky for plotting to send weapons to insurgents killing American soldiers. An Uzbek refugee was caught in 2013 in Idaho while planning to carry out attacks in the United States.

More lethal terrorist attacks came from Muslim-American citizens or immigrants who arrived in the United States through different programs, such as the Boston Marathon bombing by the ethnic Chechen brothers Tamerlan and Dzhokhar Tsarnaev, and Omar Mateen, the nightclub shooter in Orlando, Fla., who was born in New York to Afghan parents.

"So what does that tell us? What that tells us is that we need to do a good job of integrating this family when they arrive," Speckhard said.

Helping them fit in

A top international expert on radicalization and violence, Speckhard said, "If you reach out to them and help integrate the (Syrian refugees), then the risks are very low. In fact, they're far more likely to help us root out those who are becoming radicalized here and abroad."

Robyn McCall couldn't agree more.

A self-described "law-and-order type," the 56-year-old McKeesport woman retired last year from her job as a senior official at the Allegheny County Jail.

McCall, the granddaughter of Syrian Christians who came here to escape persecution in the early 20th century, volunteered to help Motab, Sabha and their children when they arrived. She said she is bogged by people's fears of them.

"If you're really afraid of these six beautiful children blowing you up with a bomb, you shouldn't ever leave your home. You're too afraid of anything," she told the Trib while cradling baby Iman.

"Instead of opposing these innocent people, you should work with us to assimilate them, like the Irish and Italians who came to Pittsburgh before them. Bring them into our fold. If my heart is big enough for these people, and my table is big enough for these people, then you should pull up a chair, too."

McCall and her daughters routinely visit with the family, bringing gifts of winter coats, toys for the children and food. They also have become cultural ambassadors for Pittsburgh, introducing the family to Kennywood, Sandcastle and the closest thing the Iron City has to a Syrian souk: the Strip District.

"When they first got here, we couldn't communicate," McCall said. "We literally played charades to communicate. That's when I began to realize how amazing they were. If you dropped me off today in Aleppo, it would take me 800 years to learn what they've learned in just months."

Formerly a taxi driver in Aleppo, Motab now works for FedEx as a package sorter.

"I like to say that we help give families a hand up, not a handout," said Leslie Aizenman, director of Refugee and Immigrant Services for the Jewish Family & Children's Service of Pittsburgh, the nonprofit that assisted Motab and his family when they arrived. "They have to go to work. And the jobs that they get mean that they're usually starting at the bottom."

The State Department provides $1,100 per head in assistance when refugees arrive but nothing after that. Part of each paycheck goes to reimbursing the taxpayer for resettling his family.

Aizenman said many Syrians differ from other refugees because they believe the situation in their homeland is temporary and that they'll return when the war ends.

But Motab and Sabha told the Trib that they plan on becoming citizens over the next five years. Their kids already have discovered Spider Man, Tom and Jerry, and American football, and they believe in the American dream.

"I'm working at my very good job now. My son goes to school every day," Motab said. "More people want to help me. I'm looking at myself as an American now."

Use of adjuncts varies in Pa.

EDUCATION • FROM A1

the National Center for the Study of Collective Bargaining in Higher Education and the Professions.

State support in 1983 covered 63 percent of costs for Pennsylvania's state-system universities. Such support accounted for about 25 percent this year.

"The continuing decline in public support for higher education since the Reagan era has placed financial pressures on all concerned: faculty, college administrators, students and parents," Herbert said. "Among the consequences of the decline in public funding are more difficult campus-based collective bargaining and the nationwide student-debt crisis."

Herbert cited the University of Illinois at Urbana-Champaign, City College of San Francisco, and the University of Illinois at Chicago as schools that endured faculty strikes in the past two years.

Protracted contract negotiations in the Pennsylvania state system are not new. Although professors have never walked off the job, talks have grown increasingly tense this year with administration proposals calling for greater control over teaching assignments, increased caps for the use of adjuncts and greater use of online education.

Such concessions are needed to give universities the flexibility needed to thrive in the 21st century, said Frank Brogan, chancellor of Pennsylvania's State System of Higher Education. He said 30-year-old contract language needs to give way to modern management needs.

Howard Bunsis, an accounting professor at Eastern Michigan University who chairs the American Association of University Professors Collective Bargaining Congress, said he has heard such claims from universities across the nation.

"The administrators use words like flexibility and nimbleness. Those are just code words that they don't want to pay people for the important work of teaching our students," Bunsis said. "They want to pay them as little as possible and give them as little say as possible."

Bunsis called it the "corporatization" of higher education.

Protected by longstanding contract language that limits the use of adjunct faculty to 25 percent of the teaching load, Pennsylvania's state-system universities have escaped much of the impact of the trend. Nationwide, adjuncts have grown from 43 to 25 percent of college and university faculty since 1975, according to the Department of Education.

At private colleges and universities across the region, the use of adjuncts varies dramatically — ranging from 48 percent at Carnegie Mellon University in Pittsburgh to 22 percent at St. Vincent College in Latrobe.

State-system officials want to increase the cap on adjuncts to 30 percent. Many of its schools have yet to hit the current 25 percent cap.

A few schools, however, need more adjuncts to accommodate special programs such as music education, state-system spokesman Kenn Marshall said.

Kenneth Mash, president of the Association of Pennsylvania State College and University Faculties, worries state-system proposals could reduce the number of tenure-track positions, stretch science professors thin and reduce pay for some adjuncts, who would have to teach five classes per semester to be considered full time rather than four as currently required.

"If they aren't offered a fifth class, that's a pay cut for our lowest-paid teachers," Mash said.

The union leader also worries that students who are paying more than ever could suffer from proposals that would expand online education and class sizes.

"If you come to one of our institutions, you come because they are teaching institutions," Mash said. "So many of our students are first-generation college students, and it takes nurturing for them to succeed."

Back in Texas, Dobbins said he was oblivious to the debate until he opened that email from his professor.

After taking on loans and juggling work and family commitments, all he wants to do is finish this semester on time.

TRUMP • FROM A1

his largely white supporters to “go and watch” polling places in certain areas to make sure things are “on the up and up.”

Peter Kostruba, a Trump supporter who traveled to his Portsmouth rally from Barnet, Vt., with his 10-year-old son, said he’s not expecting riots to break out if Clinton wins, but he sees sharper divisions in the country.

“It definitely feels like the odds are stacked, whether it’s the legal system or the voter system,” Kostruba said. “I don’t think you’re going to see all of this group here arm themselves and mobilize, but, you know, we’re probably not too many years away from that if things keep going the way we’re going.”

A prominent Trump supporter who spoke at the GOP convention last summer, Sheriff David Clarke Jr. of Wisconsin’s Milwaukee County, tweeted: “It’s incredible that our institutions of gov, WH, Congress, DOJ, and big media are corrupt & all we do is bitch. Pitchforks and torches time.” Clarke, an elected Democrat, illustrated his tweet with a photo showing angry people with clubs and torches.

House Speaker Paul Ryan, whose decision not to campaign for Trump angered the GOP nominee, made clear he does not share the candidate’s concern about the election’s legitimacy.

“Our democracy relies on confidence in election results, and the speaker is fully confident the states will carry out this election with integrity,” said AshLee Strong, speaking for him.

It was not the first time Trump has raised the idea the election is unfairly tilted against him, but it has become a resurgent theme for the New York billionaire and many of his supporters in the past several days as he’s slipped in preference polls and faced allegations of sexual misconduct.

Meanwhile, campaign money is tight, at least in comparison with his rival’s resources, according to information that pre-dates the release of a 2005 video that showed him bragging about imposing himself on women.

Trump suggested Saturday that Clinton had been on drugs during the last debate and challenged his rival to a drug test before the final debate Wednesday.

“I think we should take a drug test prior to the debate, ’cause I don’t know what’s going on with her,” he said. “But at the beginning of her last debate, she was all pumped up at the beginning. And at the end, it was like ... she could barely even reach her car.”

these groups, their perception that these groups represent a threat to American society, a desire to inspire other militia groups, and a desire to ‘wake people up,’ ” according to a criminal complaint unsealed this week.

As they hatched a plan, Stein took the lead on surveillance. Sometimes, he rode alone; sometimes, he would have the confidential informant drive him. He would survey potential targets at the apartment complex, the mosque or a nearby mall.

Inside the vehicle, he reportedly kept a pistol, an assault rifle and ammunition, a bullet-resistant vest and a night vision scope. On trips, Stein admiringly discussed the Oklahoma City bombing and the fuel oil and ammonium nitrate device McVeigh exploded in front of it.

All the while, the three men mulled their plans, using high-tech and simple methods to avoid detection. They used an app called Zello to encrypt their phone calls. Sometimes, they met in an open field.

Their conversations blurred between active planning and hate speech.

“Make sure if you start using your bow on them cockroaches, make sure you dip them in pig’s blood before you shoot them,” Stein said in an April 2016 Zello call that was recorded by the confidential informant. Consuming pork is forbidden by Islam.

At a meeting a month later, Allen reportedly suggested the group make hundreds of signs saying, “I support illegal immigration, I go against the constitution on a daily basis, I do not have any care for my fellow citizens in the state or in the town that I represent.’ ... and then for everyone of them that we blow the top of their head off we just put that around their neck.”

Their plans began to solidify over the summer as they narrowed down their targets. In August, they settled on the apartment complex in Garden City, a Somali-Muslim enclave, the complaint says. They planned to use cars to set off explosions at the exits to the complex. The explosions would boom around prayer time, when most people would be gathering.

At some point, Allen began watching YouTube videos to learn how to make explosives.

He got to work on a manifesto. But federal investigators, monitoring recordings of their meetings, knew the group’s guiding philosophies: “The only way this country’s ever going to get turned around is it will be a blood-bath,” Stein said in June.

“Unless a lot more people in this country wake up and smell the coffee and decide they want this country back ... we might be too late, if they do wake up ... I think we can get it done. But it ain’t going to be nothing nice about it.”

The Crusaders had other problems. Allen was arrested Tuesday for domestic battery. His girlfriend said Allen beat her during an argument over money. She told the officers who responded that Allen had access to a gun.

One of the last conversations investigators recorded of the Crusaders was when Stein told an undercover agent that Allen’s girlfriend “needs to disappear.”

But it was too late for the group. She showed officers the room where Allen had been making ammunition and said she believed he had been mixing explosives, too. Police say it was hexamethylene triperoxide diamine, which is used to create homemade blasting caps.

Investigators closed in on Allen on Tuesday, trailing a GMC Yukon that Allen had been driving and stopping it near Highway 83. Inside the SUV, they found AR-15 and AK-47 magazines, and bullets for a handgun — a weapons cache they believe was linked to the planned attacks.

friends and siblings, end up shooting them instead.

Using information collected by the Gun Violence Archive, a nonpartisan research group, news reports and public sources, the media outlets spent six months analyzing the circumstances of every death and injury from accidental shootings involving children 17 and younger from Jan. 1, 2014, to June 30 of this year — more than 1,000 incidents in all.

Among the findings:

- Deaths and injuries spike for children younger than 5, with 3-year-olds the most common shooters and victims among young children.

- Accidental shootings spike again for ages 15 to 17, when victims are most often fatally shot by other children but typically survive self-inflicted gunshots.

- States in the South are among those with the highest per capita rates of accidental shootings involving minors.

Another finding: The vast majority of shooters and victims are boys. A shooting last year in Shreveport, La., is a case in point.

Cameron Price, 4, and his 6-year-old brother, Ka’Darius, were riding their bikes outside the Livingston Motel, where their family had taken a $30-a-night room.

They decided to go inside, into a room where several adult acquaintances tances of their parents had been smoking marijuana. A gun was sitting out, and Ka’Darius thought the chrome and black .40-caliber pistol was a toy.

Then a single shot rang out, and the bullet fatally struck the younger boy.

Ka’Darius later told police he “pushed the bad button” and he understood his brother “had a hole in his head,” was going to the hospital and not coming home.

The Centers for Disease Control and Prevention reported that 74 minors died from accidental discharges of firearms in 2014, the latest year for which comparable data are available. The AP and USA TODAY analysis counted 113 for that year, suggesting the federal government missed a third of the cases.

While accidental shootings account for a fraction of firearm deaths, gun safety advocates have long argued that they are largely preventable.

They demand stricter laws requiring guns to be kept locked up and unloaded. But gun rights supporters argue those measures make guns less useful in emergencies; citing CDC statistics, the National Rifle Association argues in public statements that such deaths have declined significantly in recent decades and that the chance of a child dying in a firearms accident is “one in one million.”

Bob Anderson, chief of the mortality statistics branch of the CDC’s National Center for Health Statistics, suggested the NRA was citing statistics that underestimate the risk guns represent to children. He said the undercount documented by the AP and USA Today Network is “significant and important,” but not surprising.

The agency has long suspected that its statistics on accidental firearms deaths are too low, he said.

Calif. could extend “temporary” tax for 12 years

Prop 55 aims to boost education by keeping rates higher for wealthiest

ASSOCIATED PRESS

SACRAMENTO, Calif. — When Gov. Jerry Brown and his allies urged voters to adopt a temporary income tax on the wealthiest Californians and a statewide sales tax on everyone four years ago, the deal was billed as a short-term salve for a state mired in debt and on the verge of insolvency.

The taxes were needed to stave off $6 billion in so-called “trigger cuts” to schools and social programs baked into the state budget by Democrats as a threat to voters. Lawmakers also threatened to cut three weeks off the school year if Proposition 30 didn’t pass.

“Each of us need to do what we can, and for those who’ve been most blessed, we’re going to ask you for seven years. The biblical seven years,” Brown told an audience at the Commonwealth Club in November 2012.

Voters bought the pitch. Now, with the sales tax set to expire at the end of this year, and income taxes on earnings above $250,000 a year set to end in January 2019, the California Teachers Association and other labor unions want to keep the income tax, which they say is again needed to prevent $4 billion in cuts to schools.

Proposition 55, they say, does not raise taxes on anyone; it simply maintains the current income tax rates. The measure would extend the income tax for another 12 years, raising $4 billion to $9 billion a year, according to the independent state Legislative Analyst’s Office. The sales tax would expire in January.

In 2012, ballot arguments for the initial measure promised that “the money raised for schools is directed into a special fund the Legislature can’t touch and can’t be used for state bureaucracy.”

Brown vowed in campaign ads that money “must go to the classroom and can’t be touched by Sacramento politicians.”

The wording wasn’t exactly true. Although money raised for schools has gone to school districts, which are required to post annual audits, only about half the funds from Proposition 30 have gone toward school funding, according to the Legislative Analyst’s Office.

3 dead in Los Angeles restaurant shooting

12 wounded, with 2 in grave condition

ASSOCIATED PRESS

LOS ANGELES — An early morning argument at a Los Angeles restaurant operating out of a converted home apparently triggered gunfire that left three people dead and 12 wounded, two gravely, authorities said Saturday.

Los Angeles Mayor Eric Garcetti called the shooting the latest example of senseless gun violence that has reached epidemic proportions in the country.

“We cannot tolerate these tragedies multiplying in communities across America,” Garcetti said in a statement.

Police who arrived at the scene in a working class neighborhood dotted by tall palm trees found shell casings and blood throughout the restaurant, located west of downtown Los Angeles.

Los Angeles Police Department Officer Mike Lopez said investigators were seeking a suspect he described as a black male, possibly accompanied by a woman.

Police earlier questioned two possible suspects, but Lopez said later no one was in custody.

Three people died at the scene, and 12 others were transported to local hospitals.

Lopez said two of the victims were in grave condition. Two of the wounded were released and the others remain hospitalized with wounds are not considered life-threatening.

Police did not disclose the names or ages of the victims.

Neighbor Sheryl Cobb said she was awakened by screaming and gunfire, but never left her home for fear of getting caught in a crossfire.

“Bullets don’t have names on them,” she said.

According to a preliminary investigation, a party was under way in the restaurant at 12:30 a.m. Saturday when an argument started.

A man and woman left, then returned, and the restaurant erupted in gunfire.

The shooting occurred in a residential area of modest homes. Investigators were snapping photographs and scouring the ground in an area around the site.

Storm brings down trees, powerlines in Northwest

ASSOCIATED PRESS

SEATTLE — Trees and power lines snapped Saturday as a powerful storm bearing the remnants of a Pacific typhoon hit the Northwest.

Tens of thousands of people were without power in Oregon and Washington on Saturday as the storm made landfall after gathering intensity off the coast. The National Weather Service said winds gusted above 50 mph in the Portland area and that the strongest winds would hit Seattle from about 6 p.m. to 9 p.m.

“We’ve definitely seen a good round of strong wind, with gusts along the coast anywhere from 60 mph to 80 mph in some of the more exposed parts, and 50 to 60 mph in the Portland area,” said Matthew Cullen, a meteorologist with the agency. “There’s scattered damage.”

Emergency crews reported trees and power lines down throughout the region. The Tualatin Valley Fire and Rescue posted a photograph on Facebook of a tree that crushed the new car and part of the home of a family in North Plains, Oregon, near Portland. The Washington Department of Transportation said trees came down on Interstate 5 near Olympia, blocking a lane.

No injuries were immediately reported Saturday.

The storm brought heavy rain and wind from northern California to Washington state. The Quinault Indian Nation, on the coast of Washington’s Olympic Peninsula, fretted that the storm would bring a swell that would breach the sea wall that separates its main village from the Pacific Ocean, but the wall was holding Saturday amid 30-foot seas, the tribe said.

The ocean has breached the sea wall twice in recent years, bringing extensive flooding. The tribe is working to relocate the village to higher ground due to the rising sea-level from global warming and the risk of a tsunami.

The storm carried the remnants of Typhoon Songda, which wreaked havoc in the western Pacific days ago. It closely followed a separate storm that on Friday brought a tornado to Manzanita, Oregon; injured a 4-year-old boy and his father when a tree branch fell in West Seattle; and prompted the Coast Guard and other emergency officials near Port Angeles, Washington, to make several boat trips across a lake to rescue 40 teenagers and six adults who became stranded at an outdoor recreation camp after they lost power and downed trees blocked their way out.

The tornado destroyed two businesses and rendered one home uninhabitable, but no injuries were reported. Another twister was confirmed near Oceanside, Oregon, but it caused no damage.

The weather service urged people to finish any chores requiring power — such as charging cell phones — and to fill prescriptions and secure loose yard items before the worst winds hit.

Officials also warned residents to keep off the roads, closed parks and zoos, and even halted visiting hours at state prisons as the storm approached.

Fineview security guard wounds man who struck colleague with vehicle

He's detained upon seeking treatment at hospital

BY MATTHEW SANTONI

A hit-and-run driver ran down an Allegheny Dwellings security guard and was shot in the shoulder by the guard's partner Saturday afternoon in Fineview, authorities said.

Pittsburgh Public Safety spokeswoman Sonya Toler said two private security guards approached a man who had been barred from the housing complex as he sat in a vehicle at about 4 p.m. Saturday. The man, identified as Raphael David Caruso, 31, revved his engine and drove off as the guards confronted him, striking one of them, Toler said.

The second guard opened fire on Caruso as he drove off but didn't know if any of the shots struck him. Caruso showed up at Allegheny General Hospital with a gunshot wound to the shoulder at about 4:25 p.m. and police detained him, Toler said.

Medics transported the injured guard to the same hospital, where he was in stable condition. The guards are private security of ficers hired by the Pittsburgh Housing Authority, Toler said.

North Alaska town votes to adopt Inupiat Eskimo name

Issue decided by 6 votes; proponents celebrate 'reclamation of tradition'

ASSOCIATED PRESS

ANCHORAGE, Alaska — Residents in the nation's northernmost community have voted to change the name of the Alaska town to its traditional Inupiat Eskimo name.

A slight majority of voters in the largely Inupiat city of Barrow approved efforts to change the community's name to Utqiagvik in their local election Oct. 4. The vote was tight, with 381 in favor of the name change and 375 against it.

"Basically, it reinforces the cultural identity of the people," said Mayor Bob Harcharek, who is not Native. He noted that early missionaries set up schools in the area where students were forbidden to speak in their native language and were punished if they did so. "It caused some social psychological problems."

Barrow City Council member Qaiyaan Harcharek, the mayor's son, introduced a local ordinance in August that began the process ratified by voters. The younger Harcharek is Inupiat on his mother's side.

"We are now in an era where the reclamation of tradition is critical to the perpetuation of identity as Inupiat," he wrote in an email Friday to The Associated Press. "The people of Utqiagvik voted to regain our traditional name. Hopefully, it signifies the beginning of a decolonizing revolution. Regain our traditional names is just one step towards that healing!"

Another Alaska community in recent years to change its name is the western Alaska village now known as Numan Iqua, which was known as Sheldon Point until voters approved the new name in 1999.

Barrow's vote follows a high profile name change in Alaska. Last year, the Obama administration decided to bestow the traditional Alaska Native name to North America's tallest mountain, from Mt. McKinley to Denali, an Athabascan word meaning "the high one."

Space station getting 1st delivery from Va. in 2 years

ASSOCIATED PRESS

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. — The International Space Station is about to get its first delivery from Virginia in two years.

Orbital ATK, one of NASA's shippers, aims to launch its own cargo ship Sunday night from Wallops Island. The company's retooled Antares rocket will do the honors.

The mission seeks to put the state-owned launchpad back into business. It's been idle since the 2014 rocket explosion that caused about $15 million in damage.

Company officials were ecstatic on the eve of the launch. Beamed one vice president Saturday evening: "Welcome back to Wallops."

An Antares promptly exploded the last time one took off, on Oct. 28, 2014. Orbital ATK has spent the past two years redesigning the unmanned rocket and rebuilding the launchpad. It also made good on two station deliveries using another company's rockets in Florida.

Now NASA's other supplier, SpaceX, is grounded.

Sunday's launch should be visible along the East Coast.

GEORGE F. WILL

A judicial slap to a careless Congress

WASHINGTON

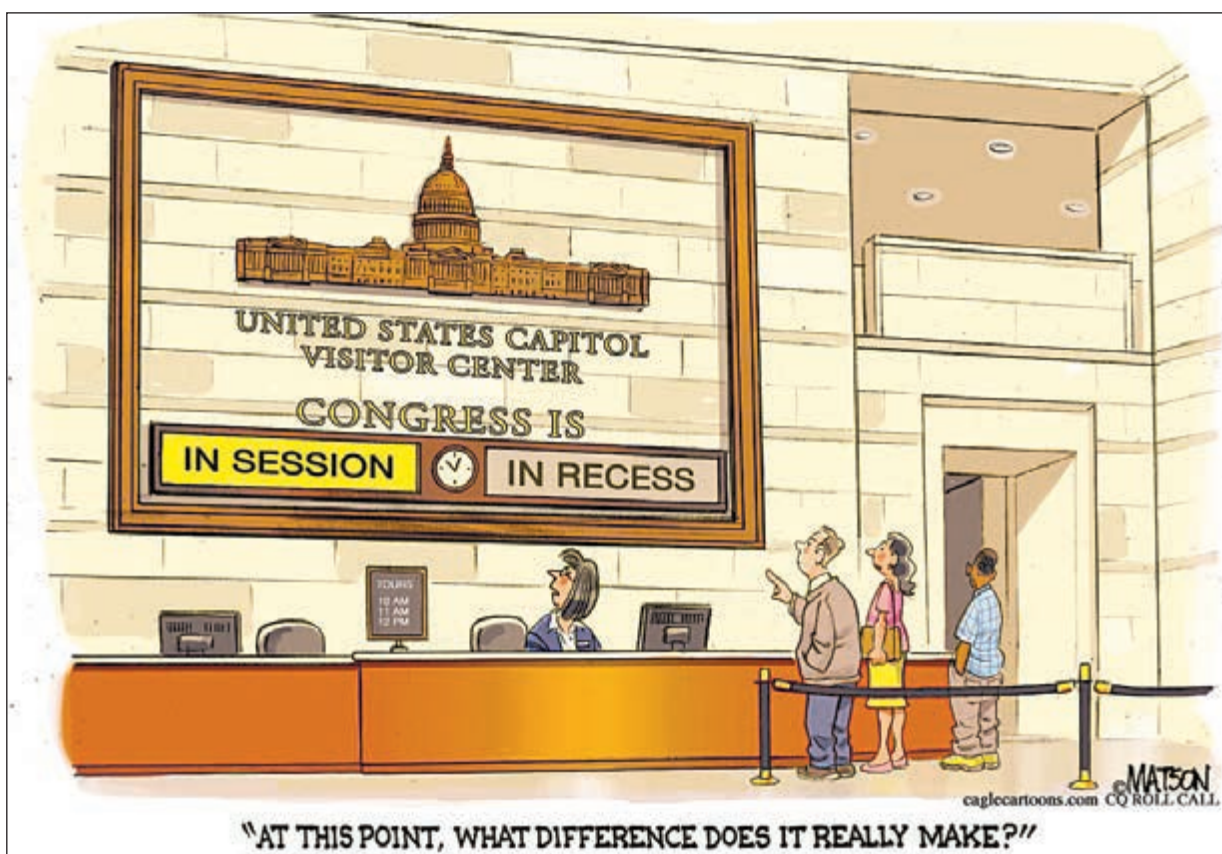

Another small step was taken last week on the steep and winding ascent back to constitutional norms. The U.S. Court of Appeals for the D.C. Circuit, the nation's second-most important court, did its judicial duty by reprimanding Congress for abandoning constitutional propriety.

The court declared unconstitutional the unprecedented independence that Congress conferred on the Consumer Financial Protection Bureau. This legal skirmish about one aspect of this one tentacle of the administrative state may seem recondite and trivial. It concerns, however, two momentous matters. One is the integrity of the federal government's Madisonian architecture. The other is something that not even the prescient James Madison could have anticipated — Congress' modern eagerness to diminish itself.

The CFPB is empowered to "regulate the offering and provision of consumer financial products or services." Being able to define financial products, it can regulate almost everything touching finance, from mortgages to financial advisers to retirement plans — even car loans, although expressly forbidden to do so. Acting like a freewheeling little legislature, it concocts laws as it improvises standards. It is authorized to "declare," with scant congressional guidance, certain business practices "abusive," "unfair," "deceptive" or involving "discrimination." It does so by whatever criteria it pleases and imposes penalties it deems appropriate.

Until the court's decision last week, the CFPB, unlike any federal institution created since 1789, was uniquely sovereign: Its director was appointed by the president for a five-year term — longer than the president's — and the director could be removed by the president only "for cause." That is, only for "inefficiency, neglect of duty or malfeasance," not for reasons of policy.

The court held that the CFPB is "unconstitutionally structured" because of its "novel agency structure." There are several agencies that are controlled by bipartisan commissioners who can only be removed for cause, and they are described as "independent" agencies as a result. But they all have five members, chosen from both parties. The court has just held, however, that as created by Congress in the 2010 slapdash Dodd-Frank legislation, the CFPB's single director "enjoys more unilateral authority than any other officer in any of the three branches of the U.S. government, other than the president."

The court's ruling makes the director subject to presidential control through dismissal. Another important challenge to the CFPB's operations, currently in a federal district court, concerns Congress' voluntary abandonment of its power of the purse: Dodd-Frank, which was passed with the support of only three House Republicans and three Republican senators, says the CFPB's funding shall be "determined by the director" and shall come not from congressional appropriations but from the Federal Reserve. Small wonder it spends lavishly on itself.

Sen. Elizabeth Warren, D-Mass., who while at Harvard Law School proposed the CFPB, insists it is "highly accountable" to Congress. The CFPB disagrees, having proclaimed that its funding from outside the appropriations process gives it "full independence" from Congress. When a member of the House Financial Services Committee asked CFPB Director Richard Cordray about his agency spending $215 million refurbishing a building with an assessed valuation of $150 million, he, oozing disdain, dismissed the question: "Why does that matter to you?" Perhaps he should be forgiven for assuming that CFPB spending government money is none of Congress' business, given that Congress has effectively said exactly that.

Although Madison assumed that the government's rival institutions would jealously defend their powers, he worried that the legislative branch would threaten the equilibrium of the checks and balances by "drawing all power into its impetuous vortex."

Today, however, Congress is centrifugal rather than centripetal, expelling rather than concentrating power.

A peculiarity of today's politics is the disproportion between Democrats' fervent desires to serve in Congress and their lackadaisical willingness to cede its powers. Democrat candidates, both incumbents and challengers, are fighting ferociously to remain on, or get to, Capitol Hill. One wonders: Why?

Their party is doctrinally devoted to marginalizing the legislative branch in order to expand the discretion of the administrative state as an instrument of executive power.

And the next president certainly will be impatient with Madison's separation of powers. President Hillary Clinton will be because progressives since Woodrow Wilson have considered this system an anachronistic impediment to energetic government powered by an unconstrained executive. President Donald Trump will be anti-Madisonian because the system of checks and balances will impede the sweep of his unmediated fabulosity.

The CFPB's progressive authoritarianism reflects, in the language of the Hudson Institute's Christopher DeMuth, "regulatory insouciance" made possible by "legislative abnegation." Both will continue until conservatism reappears.

JOSEPH SABINO MISTICK

Saving our republic

When Benjamin Franklin was leaving Independence Hall at the end of the Constitutional Convention of 1787, a lady asked him, "Well, doctor, what have we got? A republic or a monarchy?"

And Franklin replied, "A republic, if you can keep it."

Franklin knew that great republics suffered in time, vulnerable to the simple answers that demagogues always use to obscure the complexity of governing. Through lies, false promises and fear, a people's faith in their leaders is easily shaken. These tactics have threatened our republic before.

Through the 1930s, Father Charles Coughlin's weekly radio show reached 30 million listeners, a huge share of the nation's population of 123 million. Initially, his populist message sought a fair shake for average Americans. But it grew increasingly darker, and his audience followed suit.

When he was still a supporter of Franklin Delano Roosevelt, Coughlin predicted "a revolution in this country which will make the French Revolution look silly" if Congress balked at the president's monetary reform. But he was quick to turn on FDR and eventually spoke admiringly about Mussolini and Hitler.

Coughlin was an anti-Semitic isolationist with a penchant for conspiracies, which his followers loved. His "America First" campaign encouraged thousands to march in New York City to protest the immigration of Jewish refugees, who were escaping the horrors of Hitler's Germany.

And when radio stations began to cancel his show in response to his increasingly anti-Semitic rants and dangerous lies, his followers turned against the media.

But in the run-up to World War II, patience for his pro-fascist views waned, ending the public chapter of his life.

And we kept the republic.

Again, America seems to be grappling with Franklin's challenge, as Donald Trump fans the legitimate frustrations of many average Americans with his lies and fear. He streams lies, telling several more before fact-checkers can refute the first one.

When caught red-handed with video proof, he simply denies it again, more emphatically.

This time, Syrian refugees, Mexicans and Muslims are used to stoke fear. Trump has called them terrorists and criminals, even proposing a religious test for admission into the country. And, shamelessly, he has parroted the anti-Semitic rallying cry of the past, creating an "America First" app, a virtual gathering place for Trump activists.

Trump takes obvious pleasure in shaking our faith in the bulwarks of our republic. Trying to destroy confidence in our elections, he claims that he can only lose if the election is rigged. And if he wins, like a cheap third-world tyrant, he promises to imprison his opponent.

Trump owes his political success to free media coverage; The New York Times reported that he received $2 billion worth by March of this year. But, now that his fortunes have turned, he calls the media crooked, blaming it for his woes. And his followers love it.

We rejected tyranny to create our republic. And, from time to time, we must reject it to keep our republic. As Franklin said, "Rebellion to tyrants is obedience to God."

What is the U.S. mission in Afghanistan?

On Sept. 9, 2001, a famed Tajik commander and war hero named Ahmad Shah Massoud was approached for an interview by two individuals claiming to be journalists. A bomb concealed in a video camera carried by one of them exploded, and Massoud died while being evacuated to a nearby hospital.

He was known as "the Lion of Panjshir," named for his leadership against the Soviet Union's invasion during the 1980s, and he had been the most formidable leader of the Northern Alliance against the Taliban. Al-Qaida is the most likely suspect for his assassination, and his death removed a potentially strong ally for the United States just before the attacks on Sept. 11, 2001.

Massoud has been lionized since his death. His courage in fighting the Red Army is well remembered, and portraits of him on billboards can be seen in northern Afghanistan to this day. Hamid Karzai's government declared him an official Hero of Afghanistan, and the reverence shown during his funeral explains why: I deployed to Afghanistan with the U.S. Army five years later in 2006, right when the war was already being described as the so-called forgotten war, just like the Korean War. The surge in Iraq was about to be in full gear. Most Americans no longer cared about Afghanistan, even as thousands of young men and women felt like they were stuck at the end of the world there.

What was once a righteous crusade against Osama bin Laden in the aftermath of Sept. 11 became a footnote in the news in a matter of months.

The scattered mountain-top outpost I knew might as well have been on the far side of the moon as far as the public was concerned. I spent 16 months of my life there, and few Americans could point to it on a map.

When I went back to Afghanistan in 2009 for another year, this time in Wardak province, things had changed. No longer was it a few brigades stuck out in some dusty outposts on a mountaintop. Now we were deep in central Afghanistan, trying to pacify districts that had been written off by previous military commanders.

Suddenly, there were more than 100,000 soldiers in Afghanistan and resources beyond the imagination of just three years ago during my first tour on the Pakistan border. The "forgotten war" suddenly became important again.

Fifteen years later, the United States still has more than 8,000 men and women in Afghanistan, not counting private contractors. Recently a Special Forces soldier named Adam S. Thomas, a friend of my old platoon leader, was killed by an improvised explosive device in Nangarhar Province. He was 31.

This is an election year, but it's a rare occurrence when either presidential candidate even mentions Afghanistan. Donald Trump's campaign has claimed that Afghanistan is "Obama's War," with a distinct lack of knowledge concerning time and space.

As far as Hillary Clinton goes, during her years as secretary of State, it is difficult to think of a single issue she has impacted there.

It is the same old story: Every Joe knows that no politician is going to come and save you.

Stephen Carlson served two tours in Afghanistan as an infantryman with the 10th Mountain Division.

Banged-up Panthers roll on

Despite injuries, Pitt defense holds Virginia to 3 points in 2nd half of 3rd straight win

BY JERRY DI PAOLA

CHARLOTTESVILLE, Va. — One by one, Pitt players fell or were shoved to the ground, heads ringing, limbs aching, feet moving so slowly they barely made it to the sideline without help.

Yet, somehow, with a roster that still needs plenty of replenishment into the future, Pitt coach Pat Narduzzi found a way to fill in the blanks and defeat Virginia, 45-31, on Saturday in front of 39,522 people at Scott Stadium.

“I don’t know if we wore them down,” Narduzzi said after his team allowed a mere field goal after halftime. “We are little worn down ourselves.”

“We knew we just had to keep pedaling uphill.”

Pitt (5-2, 2-1 ACC) entered the game without four defensive players who began the season as starters — defensive end Dewayne Hendrix, linebackers Mike Caprara and Elijah Zeise and cornerback Avonte Maddox.

Then, ACC Defensive Player of the Year candidate Ejuan Price, linebacker Quintin Wirginis and free safety Terrish Webb went down and missed significant moments. For the most part, nothing changed, especially in the second half.

- Sophomore Phillipie Motley filled in nicely for Maddox (arm), recording one of Pitt’s four pass break-ups. Playing Motley also preserved a redshirt for freshman cornerbacks and playing-time candidates Damar Hamlin and Therran Coleman.

- Defensive end Rori Blair, who has played most of the season for Hendrix, recorded two sacks.

Penguins pepper Anaheim

Cup champs amass 45 shots to move to 2-0; Fleury strong again

BY BILL WEST

What Tom Kuhnhackl, Conor Sheary and Patric Hornqvist did at critical moments during Saturday’s 3-2 win over Anaheim at PPG Paints Arena failed to fit the description of thrilling, but their actions absolutely qualified as the sort that defined the Penguins’ territory-owning style last spring.

Elements of the Penguins’ vaunted speed game, namely odd-man rushes, remained elusive in the team’s second game of the season. But the pressure and possession that produced a Stanley Cup emerged late in the first period and lingered for the next 40-plus minutes.

Anaheim had a 16-12 edge in shots on goal through the first 14 minutes. Then the Ducks offense stalled, and the Penguins’ pace prevailed, as they finished with a 45-35 edge in shots.

Just four times last regular season, the Penguins reached 45 shots on goal — all four instances came under coach Mike Sullivan, including in his debut Dec. 14.

Phil Kessel carried the puck from the left wing corner to the slot and beat Ducks goalie Jonathan Bernier through the five-hole to score the deciding goal during a second-period power play. But Kessel’s scoring chance came from heads-up hustle by Hornqvist, who won a puck battle in the corner against Anaheim defenseman Josh Manson.

Six minutes earlier, Sheary, Chris Kunitz and Matt Cullen swarmed a puck to make Bernier and Ducks defenseman Cam Fowler pay for a miscue. Fowler and Bernier bungled an exchange behind the net. The Penguins’ trio swooped in to prevent Bernier from covering the puck, and a poke from Sheary eventually produced the goal.

STEELERS’ PHILOSOPHY OF DEVELOPING PRACTICE SQUAD TALENT PAYING DIVIDENDS

BY RALPH N. PAULK

If the Steelers find themselves hoisting the Lombardi Trophy in Houston, it won’t be because Ben Roethlisberger and Antonio Brown did it alone.

Already, both point to unheralded, unsung players whose rapid ascension through the depth chart has been somewhat stunning. They have proven to be more than serviceable or capable replacements for injured starters during a 4-1 start that has the Steelers perched atop the AFC North.

L.J. Fort, a stubbornly competitive small-college product cut five times, first stepped up when linebacker Ryan Shazier went down with a knee injury in the season opener at Washington.

“I was told it was a learning process when I was on the practiced squad last year,” Fort said. “The idea was to get us on the field. We all have the mindset of fulfilling our dreams to show what we’ve got, but it’s all about helping us win.”

The Steelers have succeeded as injuries have mounted. One by one, largely unknown players have walked through a door of opportunity swung wide open for one reason or another. Jordan Dangerfield, auditioning for the third and last time on the practice squad, went from understudy to starter the past two weeks as strong safety Robert Golden recovered from a strained hamstring.

Club saw big decline in run prevention during 78-win season

BY TRAVIS SAWCHIK

The Pirates front office staff and coaches gathered last week in Bradenton, Fla., for their annual postseason meetings. They evaluated the previous season and began setting a course for the offseason.

The clear goal is to close the gap on the Cubs in the National League Central. The team must find and improve pitching and overall run prevention to cut into the 25-game difference between the two teams this year.

Identifying the issue is one thing. Fixing it is an entirely different challenge.

This year, the Pirates allowed exactly one more run per game than they did a season ago (758 runs to 596). That dramatic decline explains much of the team’s 20-win decline from 2015.

The Pirates expect the free agent market for starting pitching will become more expensive, complicating their ability to add a quality veteran to a staff trending younger and more homegrown.

The Pirates drifted from their ground ball focus last season, and the ground ball has become a more difficult edge to maintain.

The Pirates also must address a declining defensive effort behind their pitchers.

Said Pirates general manager Neal Huntington of a key question to answer: “How do we apply those lessons of last offseason and two offseasons ago to this offseason?”

Risk tolerance

One lesson from last offseason? It is becoming more difficult to find external pitching help.

Last offseason, Huntington lamented the starting pitching market “blew up.” The average starting pitcher signed last offseason earned $10.02 million per year, compared to $8.07 million in the 2014-15 offseason — a 21.6 percent increase.

TIP OF THE WEEK Take your time and go slow. That advice pays when it comes to hunting pheasants. Some hunters walking a field go through at a steady pace, hoping to flush birds before them. Instead, stop every now and again. Those pauses often are enough to make birds inclined to let you pass on by nervous enough to take to the air.

Vacancies pop up on boards

It was an emotional moment. The most recent Pennsylvania Game Commission meeting was Ron Weaner's last. The Adams County man wrapped up an eight-year term on the agency's board.

As is custom for outgoing commissioners, he was given time to reflect on his experiences.

Weaner, who has been battling health issues, broke down at times. That's not the norm for him, he said.

But he said he was going to miss serving sportsmen, who continually amazed him with their passion.

Prior to joining the commission, Weaner spent 16 years as a school board member in Gettysburg. In all that time, he said, he received five phone calls from constituents.

As a member of the commission board, he said it wasn't uncommon to get 700 calls and emails a month.

"I may be wrong, but what that tells me is people don't care about their schools and taxes, but if you mess with their hunting seasons, they come out of the woodwork," Weaner said.

Who gets to experience all that next?

The commission's eight-member board already had one vacancy before Weaner's departure. The northeast region seat previously held by Jay Delaney of Luzerne County has been empty since April 2015.

The Fish and Boat Commission likewise has a vacancy for the district previously represented by Bob Bachman of Lancaster County.

That's just the start, though. Each board will have multiple additional vacancies next year.

Finding long-term replacements begins with the Governor's Advisory Council for Hunting, Fishing and Conservation. It's that body's responsibility to interview candidates and make recommendations.

The Governor picks nominees from among them, then the state Senate votes to confirm them.

But it starts with the council.

Gov. Tom Ridge formed the first advisory council in 1985; every Governor since has had his own. Gov. Tom Wolf established his council last November.

The work of actually choosing council members only recently wrapped up, however. According to Wolf spokesman Jeff Sheridan, a 20-member council has been appointed. An official announcement is expected any day.

Former state Rep. Dan Surra of Elk County will serve as chairman. Others on the council include Jose Taracido of Cal (Pa.) University, who helped get the state's wild pheasant reintroduction program started; Doug Austen of Dauphin County, the former executive director of the Fish and Boat Commission; Delaney, the former Game Commissioner; outdoors writer Ben Moyer of Fayette County; Spencer Simon of Allegheny County; and Michelle Kittell of Union County, who runs the Pennsylvania Institute for Conservation Education.

The word is that six or so of the earliest board members confirmed did interviews, recommending a couple of potential replacements for Delaney and Bachman. Nominations, Sheridan said, are forthcoming.

That would be good news. The council has important work to do; it's past time to get to it.

GEAR OF THE WEEK 180i

Sugg. retail price: $299.99

Company: Moultrie Products (moultriefeeders.com)

Gear type: Game camera

Product description: This is by no means an inexpensive game camera. But it promises to do what some others can't. Specifically, that's capture photos and video across a 180-degree field of view. That, the company says, is three times the range of the typical game camera. It switches lenses based on which detects movement, all without making noise.

Available options: The trigger speed on this camera is a fast 0.5 seconds. It has a 70-foot flash range, with "INVISIBLE" 940 mm infrared LED flash technology and 14-megapixel resolution. It will capture up to 15,000 images and shoots 1080p HD video in 30- and 90-second bursts on 12 AA batteries.

Notable: This camera comes in Mossy Oak Country Camo. It's compatible with the company's mobile software, too.

Squirrels are an abundant and widespread, if underappreciated, small-game species across Pennsylvania.

ACTION-PACKED HUNT

Squirrels more abundant than ever, fun and tasty, but often overlooked

BY BOB FRYE

The perfect quarry for starting out kids in the woods, that's how they often are described.

And true enough, they are that.

But to hear their fans across the country tell it, squirrels are a whole lot more, too. They are a fine game species in their own right, one that's fun to hunt and tasty on the table.

Nate Wilder certainly is a fan. The Raleigh, N.C., man has a website — squirrelhunting-journal.com — devoted entirely to hunting the tree climbers. It attracts visitors from all over the East Coast, including Pennsylvania, he said.

Like him, all of them are passionate about squirrel hunting, he said.

"There's a lot of allure to it to me," Wilder said.

The reasons why are numerous. He likes squirrel hunting because of the camaraderie. He likes it because, unlike deer hunting, there's no need to worry about things like scent control. He likes it because he can move around a bit, rather than having to sit in one place for hours on end.

And as much as anything, he said, he likes the action.

"A lot of guys, if they're hunting deer, depending on where they're at, they pull the trigger once and they're maybe done. I like knowing that, potentially, I'm going to be able to pull the trigger a lot," Wilder said.

He and a friend did that a lot last year, taking approximately 150 squirrels.

That same potential exists here.

There are some localized areas of the state where timbering has made a dent in squirrel habitat, said Matt Lovallo, supervisor of the game mammals section for the Pennsylvania Game Commission. But generally speaking, the state is home to lots of mature mast-bearing trees like Pennsylvania squirrel hunters don't have to worry about too much in the way of competition.

Declining trend

As recently as 1993, for example, there were an estimated 311,103 squirrel hunters, according to the Pennsylvania Game Commission. That was more than hunted pheasants, rabbits, ruffed grouse, spring and fall turkeys and black bears.

They were successful, too. The harvest that year was nearly 1.6 million squirrels.

Both squirrel hunting participation and squirrel harvests have steadily declined over time, however.

In 2014, the most recent year for which estimates are available, there were 120,538 squirrel hunters. They took 467,888 squirrels.

That still is more people hunting squirrels than pheasants, rabbits and grouse. But spring and fall turkeys and black bears now are more popular with sportsmen.

That likely is a reflection of the hunting calendar, said the commission's Matt Lovallo. Someone into whitetails, for example, can spend almost their entire autumn chasing just deer because of extended seasons.

"There's just so much opportunity out there. People have to pick and choose," he said. "And I think a lot of people these days are more interested in big game than anything else."

— Bob Frye

oaks and hickories.

As a result, there probably are more squirrels out there for the taking than at any time in recent decades, Lovallo said.

"Statewide, I think you can say that," he added.

Pennsylvania's season on squirrels opened Oct. 15 and runs through Nov. 26. It comes back from Dec. 12-24 and Dec. 26-Feb. 28.

Hunters can take fox, gray and red squirrels, with a daily limit of six combined.

Anyone who bags a few is in for a treat, so long as they're handled correctly, said Travis Gameson of Norman, Okla. He is a member of the "Okie Squirrel Busters" team that won 2016's Squirrels Unlimited World Champion Squirrel Cook-off (squirrelcookoff.com) last month in Arkansas.

Gameson's team produced a fried squirrel ravioli. Other competitors made everything from squirrel-stuffed mushrooms to squirrel sliders. All those giving away samples had lines of people eager for a taste, he said.

Most liked what they tried, he said.

"Squirrel meat is certainly not very gamey at all," Gameson said. "It's a mild meat."

That's not surprising, he said. For being technically rodents, squirrels are clean animals that feed largely on acorns, hickory nuts and the like.

Their flesh can be tough, though, he said. Squirrels are all muscle, so they are best cooked slowly.

Often, that means cooking them until the meat can be pulled from the bone, he said.

But done that way, and perhaps ground and mixed with something like bacon or pancetta to provide moisture, they're very good, he said.

"Squirrel is a type of meat you can just get really creative with. You just need to get a mess of them and start experimenting," he said.

To get a "mess," Wilder starts by "hunting the food." He looks for stands of oaks and hickories then grabs a seat.

"Most of the time we go in right before daybreak and we're still. We sit and see what happens," he said. "Usually we're pretty successful."

Andrew Lewand of Rochester, N.Y., a field staffer with FoxPro, the Pennsylvania-based game call maker, said he sometimes gets squirrels by sneaking quietly through the woods. He looks for "cuttings," or acorns and hickory shells that show evidence of squirrel feeding, and listens for leaves, nuts and debris falling from the tops of trees. All of that indicates active squirrels, he said.

Later, in late-morning and early afternoon, he falls back on another trick, using a squirrel call. The barks it reproduces sometimes sparks squirrels to respond.

"That's a pretty effective tactic, a more aggressive one, that can pay off when the action slows down," Lewand said.

Both prefer to use a .22 rifle over a shotgun, firing standard velocity hollow point rounds. The relatively quiet report of such a gun is less intrusive and alarming to squirrels, they agreed.

It also hones precision shooting abilities, Lewand said. Squirrel hunting is great practice for many other types of hunting, he added.

"Dad called it deer hunting in miniature. The woodsmanship skills you learn squirrel hunting transfer to hunting deer and really anything, for that matter," he said.

Gameson agrees and said he makes a point of hunting squirrels early each year, before big game seasons fill the calendar, in part to scout for whitetails.

"It's a great way to start a hunting season," he said.

And end one and fill in all the time between, Wilder added.

"Yeah, they're mainly what I key on," Wilder said. "When I want a lot of meat, I shoot a deer. But squirrels are it for me. We really look forward to it."

RECIPE OF THE WEEK

SQUIRREL DUMPLINGS

Ingredients

- 3 squirrels
- 1 egg
- 2 cups flour
- 1 teaspoon salt
- salt and pepper to taste

Directions

Here's a traditional and tasty way to eat squirrels. Butcher squirrels, then put in four quarts water. Bring to a boil and cook until meat is tender. Remove and pull meat from bones. Set aside and bring broth back to a low boil. Mix flour, egg, salt and ¾ cup of the broth in a large bowl. Roll mixture on a cutting board until thin. Cut dumplings into strips or chunks and drop, one at a time so they don't stick, into boiling broth. Return meat to broth and cook until dumplings are tender. Add salt and pepper to taste.

PIRATES • FROM B1

"It will be worse this year," said Huntington of a class of free agent arms expected to be historically thin.

While the Pirates are attempting to retain Ivan Nova, he likely will head to free agency as a top-five starting pitcher in the class.

Not only are proven veteran pitchers becoming more expensive, but the market for reclamation-type pitchers also is becoming more competitive. More teams are identifying the same players as undervalued thanks to growth of front office staff and available data.

"It's absolutely become more competitive, more challenging," Huntington said. "When more teams evaluate the way you do, the prices get driven up and resources become the advantage again."

"We continue to work to find ways to stay ahead of the curve."

The Pirates were out-bid for the most intriguing reclamation pitching project last winter, Rich Hill, by $500,000 by the Oakland A's, according to Peter Gammons. The decision not to bid more aggressively on J.A. Happ was questioned often in Pittsburgh this summer.

Hill finished 12-5, and Happ went 20-4.

"Sitting here now, it's easy to say we should have moved on J.A. Happ or Rich Hill. ... We don't have the benefit of hindsight," Huntington said.

If more teams are targeting the same players, does the Pirates front office need to change its level of risk tolerance? In the past, the Pirates have preferred to spread risk — and their modest budget — over multiple smaller, shorter-term contracts.

"Is that (risk tolerance) line moving? It has," Huntington said. "Because every significant contract we sign is a risk. When you look at Francisco Liriano at $13 million, when he performed well, it is an affordable contract. But it's the equivalent of $30-$40 million (per year) for the Dodgers. Percent of payroll is real. It's not an excuse. When a contract is 13 percent of your payroll versus 4 percent, the level of risk tolerance is so very different How far do you stretch? It is a case-by-case situation."

Huntington said the club also will consider exploring a trade of position players to "strengthen" pitching.

Perhaps the most important lesson from last offseason?

"It is a reminder of how important it is for us to develop our own starting pitching," Huntington said. "Fortunately, we have a good number of options. Some will continue to progress. The real world shows us some will regress."

While the Pirates must produce a more homegrown rotation to sustain success, from 2013-15 each Pirates rotation included at least two productive veteran starters.

New model up in the air?

Besides finding and signing undervalued arms, the Pirates' competitive edge on the ground also is being challenged.

The Pirates led baseball in ground-ball rate in each season from 2013-15, producing a record rate of 52.5 percent in 2013.

In 2016? The Pirates fell to third (46.9 percent).

And the rate dropped in a season when power spiked. After allowing 113 home runs per season from 2013-15, the fewest in the sport, the Pirates allowed 180 home runs in 2016, which ranked 10th.

At last December's winter meetings, Huntington said the Pirates could not be married to one model (i.e. ground-ball pitchers) in a pitching market that has grown scarcer and more expensive.

The Pirates went on to acquire fly-ball pitchers like Neftali Feliz, Juan Nicasio and Ryan Vogelsong with mixed results. Extreme fly-ball pitchers like Charlie Morton and A.J. Burnett departed.

Huntington said the club will continue to value the ground ball but will look at all types of arms.

"We are a copy-cat industry," Huntington said. "Ground-ball pitchers have become more valued. We could be stubborn and stay the course and pay more than we ideally like. Or we can look in a different direction and find value in a different way. ... It comes back to what may be successful for five years will probably not be for 10. There is a constant ebb and flow."

Pirates manager Clint Hurdle said the club must continue to teach and add the skill to pitchers in the system, noting Jameson Taillon successfully added the two-seamer in 2016 (52.4 percent ground ball rate).

"(The ground ball) is something that we're going to keep as one of our cornerstones," Hurdle said. "We've had a recipe for success, and we want to follow it."

Glove gap

Pitching and defense are closely connected, and the Pirates' defense has declined.

The Pirates are evaluating the shallower outfield alignment plan they implemented last spring.

Consider in 2013 the Pirates ranked third in baseball, and first in the NL, with 60 Defensive Runs Saved (DRS). That number has declined each year, falling to 12 DRS in 2015 and -17 DRS in 2016. That is the equivalent of a seven-win decline since 2013, and a three-win decline from 2015 to 2016.

The Cubs led baseball with 82 DRS, or, roughly a 10-win edge defensively over the Pirates.

Huntington said center fielder Andrew McCutchen's MLB-worst -27 DRS mark "catches your attention." But Huntington and Hurdle also said McCutchen was hurt at times by playing shallower while the staff was less able to execute.

"As this staff played out, it didn't match up to the same analytics off the mound (from 2015) that we were looking to (regarding) the defense," Hurdle said. "We have some thoughts moving forward on how to adjust."

INDIANS 2, BLUE JAYS 1

Tribe mow down Jays

Tomlin provides 2nd straight sharp start; Miller proving to be unhittable

ASSOCIATED PRESS

CLEVELAND — They don't have a true superstar, an embarrassment of All-Stars or a celebrity following. That's the NBA champion Cavaliers, who play next door.

The Indians, though, have depth, chemistry, one of baseball's best managers and quite possibly the most dominant bullpen weapon in the game.

Andrew Miller has Cleveland two wins from the World Series — and Toronto batters flailing.

Josh Tomlin baffled Blue Jays batters for nearly six innings, and Miller, acquired just ahead of the trade deadline for exactly these pressure-packed October moments, blew them away as Cleveland edged Toronto, 2-1, on Saturday to take 2-0 lead in the AL Championship Series.

Carlos Santana homered off 20-game winner J.A. Happ, and Francisco Lindor had an RBI single for the Indians. They won the second straight tense game in this series and have won five straight postseason games for the first time in their 116-year history.

An afterthought in August, Tomlin has emerged as an unlikely October star for the Indians. He allowed one run and three hits in 5²/₃ innings for his second win of the postseason — he won the Game 3 Division Series clincher in Boston — before Cleveland manager Terry Francona handed the ball to the magnificent Miller, who is making the Blue Jays look like Little Leaguers.

The lanky left-hander struck out the side in the seventh, two more in the eighth and has 10 strikeouts in 3²/₃ innings in the series. He has not allowed a run in 16 career postseason innings.

"He's one of the best I've ever seen," said closer Cody Allen, who worked the ninth to close the three-hitter for his second straight save. "He goes out there for two innings, shuts them down and gets a lot of swings and misses. Whenever you get to come in behind a guy like that, you're in a pretty good spot."

So are the Indians, who never had been up 2-0 in four previous ALCS trips.

Miller has been the difference so far, blowing through the Blue Jays. Before getting a ground-out in the eighth, he struck out seven straight over two games.

Cubs' Baez shines on playoff stage

Chicago's super-utility player grabs spotlight on team filled with stars

ASSOCIATED PRESS

CHICAGO — Javier Baez is putting on quite a show for the Chicago Cubs. And he just might be turning these playoffs into his personal stage.

Whether he's hitting a game-winning home run or making some spectacular defensive play, Baez has been hard to miss in these playoffs.

sports.triblive.com
Saturday's Game 1 of the NLCS ended too late for this edition. Visit our website for coverage.

I'm just having fun right now and obviously trying to win."

It must be fun to be Baez these days.

The Cubs came into the postseason with the best record in the majors and their sights set on their first championship since 1908.

They knocked out San Francisco in four games in the NL Division Series in no small part because of Baez's play at the plate and at second base. And if they take out the Los Angeles Dodgers in the NLCS, a franchise defined more by curses and heartbreak will go to the World Series for the first time since 1945.

On a team loaded with stars, Baez has been putting on quite a show in the postseason.

He hit the winning home run off Johnny Cueto in the opener against the Giants and the go-ahead single in the ninth in Game 4.

On defense, playing mostly second base, it was as if the Baez highlight reel was on a nonstop loop with no shortage of diving stops and lightning quick tags.

Even when he was chewing gum in the dugout Baez managed to amaze. Take this gem from Game 4 of the NLDS.

The gum popped out after Baez put it in his mouth, but what happened next was about as impressive as any play he made in the field. He juggled it a few times, finally snagged it with his right hand.

Baez pointed at a trainer as he was about to put it back in his mouth, then looked the camera, and grinned.

"I saw the camera," Baez said. "I didn't know if he got it or not, but I caught it."

No surprise.

After all, the 23-year-old Baez has been catching just about everything that comes his way this season. And if that's not enough, he also hit .273 with 14 homers and 59 RBIs in 142 games.

That's a big jump considering he struck out 95 times in 213 at-bats and hit .169 after he debuted for the Cubs in 2014. But his swing is more compact now. He closed his stance and cut down the big leg kick he had when he first arrived.

Now he's looking like a breakout star.

Manager Joe Maddon noticed the potential watching Baez in winter ball in Puerto Rico, right after he was hired two years ago.

"Everybody was talking about his hitting and the fact that he needed to hit better at the plate and be more selective," he said. "And I was, 'OK, I get that.'" "I was impressed by everything else that he did. Sometimes, we get caught up on somebody's weaknesses and don't glorify their strengths. I mean, his strengths are pretty outstanding."

Baez was taken by the Cubs with the ninth pick in the 2011 amateur draft and worked his way through the minors as a shortstop. But with Addison Russell there, he has become a super-utility player.

That could change down the line, depending on the moves the Cubs make. But they are relying on him to play multiple positions — and to play them as well as anyone.

Baez just might be the best defensive second baseman, shortstop and third baseman on the team.

"You have to get used to being flexible, not knowing what the lineup's gonna look like and just jumping in there and being ready to help and do whatever you can," said Ben Zobrist, who has built his career around playing multiple positions.

"Whatever role they put him in this year, he's done really well and he's had a great attitude about it."

AP

Chicago Cubs second baseman Javier Baez has come a long way since batting .169 with 95 strikeouts in 213 at-bats two years ago.

Debate slip-up could cost Toomey, McGinty

Blunder would give Senate campaigns fodder for attack ads

BY TOM FONTAINE

After spending months and tens of millions of dollars on political attacks, Pat Toomey and Katie McGinty square off Monday in the first of two televised debates in Pennsylvania's pivotal U.S. Senate race. "The first debate will be a prime opportunity for Pennsylvanians to see the choice they will have for Senate in November," Toomey campaign spokesman Ted Kwong said. He described Toomey as "an independent voice ... who stands up for taxpayers, jobs and public safety" and McGinty as "a partisan rubber stamp."

McGinty spokesman Sean Coit described Toomey as "someone who only thinks about making politically calculated decisions to protect his career."

He pointed to the Republican Toomey's refusal to say whether he will vote for GOP presidential candidate Donald Trump, who has been embroiled in controversy, particularly after a 2005 video surfaced showing him bragging about groping women.

Political experts said they don't expect large viewership for the hourlong debate, which will be recorded Monday afternoon at KDKA-TV's Pittsburgh studios and air at 7 p.m. Monday.

But a slip-up during the debate could spell trouble.

"It gives the other side the ability to make commercials," said Wes Leckrone, a political science professor at Chester's Widener University.

'A different animal'

WILDLAND ARSONISTS HARD TO IDENTIFY, AND ARRESTS RARE

BY RENATTA SIGNORINI

The evening was ruined for Waterford firefighters before dinner arrived at their annual banquet.

Thick, black smoke pouring off nearby Laurel Mountain sent them heading for the steep hills.

"It's not like your everyday fire, like a house fire, a car fire," said Patrick Kromel, assistant chief with Waterford Fire Company and a state fire warden. "In the mountain, it's a different animal."

Firefighters spent hours containing 20 acres that burned last April. The Ligonier Township volunteers went back the next day when another 10 acres burned — just 1,000 yards from the previous fire.

"At that point, we started scratching our heads," Kromel said. "Something's not right here."

A Pennsylvania wildland fire investigator came to the same conclusion.

This summer, authorities charged a New Florence man with setting 11 fires in that area that caused $35,000 in damages.

Though arson has been the second-leading cause of wildfires across the state for the past four years, arrests are rare.

Investigators charge an average of one to four suspects annually with intentionally starting wildfires, according to Michael Kern, chief of the forest fire protection division of the state's Bureau of Forestry. The agency, which is part of the Department of Conservation and Natural Resources, doesn't track arrest statistics.

"If you compare that to the number of incendiary fires reported each year, you can see that the percentage is not very high," Kern said.

In 22 years, state fire inspector Brian Vinski has secured two convictions — both in Somerset County — in blazes that he ruled arson.

"Wildland arsonists are ... very difficult to identify because, so often, they're in remote areas, they're by themselves, so there's absolutely no witness" or surveillance footage to examine, said Vinski, who works at the Forbes State Forest district office.

But an arsonist seeing an investigator poking around at the blaze site might be a deterrent, he said.

"The perpetrator eventually will make a mistake," Vinski said. "They can't keep their mouths shut. They leave evidence. They get sloppy."

Arson in the Poconos

Two fires that consumed more than 8,000 acres of wildlands in the Delaware State Forest in eastern Pennsylvania have been ruled arson, according to Michael Kern, chief of the forest fire protection division of the state's Bureau of Forestry. It took two weeks for numerous firefighters to extinguish the blazes that started April 20.

In September, the state Department of Conservation and Natural Resources increased a reward for information about the fires and a possible suspect from $15,000 to $20,000.

Costs of fighting the fires have been assessed at $2 million.

"It seems that people don't take arsonists seriously when it's wildlands involved," Kern said. "It's a risk to life and property. We want to put a stop to it."

Train shifts tracks from hauling coal to tourists

Kiski Junction Railroad tours sold out, which helps offset downturn in energy sector

BY MARY ANN THOMAS

Forced to cut back hauling freight from a steel mill and a coal mine, Gilpin's Kiski Junction Railroad still chugs along as a booming tourist attraction.

All of its scheduled fall and Christmas tours are sold out, filling the train's antique coach car with a total of about 3,000 passengers. The autumn foliage tour follows the railroad's line for nine miles north along the Allegheny River.

According to a homemade sign at its entrance, 71 people live in Schenley, which, if accurate, means more people ride the train in one trip to see nature's leaf show along the Allegheny River than live in this riverside enclave of Gilpin.

The railroad's popularity is in part due to the fact it is the only tourist train in southwestern Pennsylvania, according to the Pennsylvania Tourism Office.

Although commercial interests have dimmed, the 160-year-old rail line has a history of reinvention from a segment of the Pennsylvania Main Line Canal to a rail line for the Pennsylvania Railroad.

In recent decades, the short line transported material from Allegheny Technologies Inc.'s Bagdad plant in Gilpin and coal from Rosebud's Logansport mine in Bethel Township.

"Business has been good," said Bob Reddinger, supervisor of operations.

"With the mill closing down, we lost revenue, but we are still plugging away," he said. "The tourist train helps. Hopefully, the coal industry will pick up."

Armstrong County Commissioners Chairman Pat Fabian said the entire county has been affected by downturns in the Marcellus shale natural gas, coal and steel industries.

OUR STORIES JOURNEYS THAT TIE US TOGETHER

Everyone has a story. In a weekly series, the Tribune-Review finds and tells the often-hidden but always extraordinary stories of our lives.

It's good to be the king

Mt. Lebanon student with Down syndrome rules the night at homecoming

BY CHRIS TOGNERI

Robert Demsky is nervous, and everyone can tell because Robert isn't very good at hiding his emotions.

Perhaps because he's never tried. Throughout the week, his parents told him:

"If they call someone else's name, you have to smile and clap."

Robert dutifully nodded in agreement.

But by the time Friday rolled around, he could no longer contain his excitement. His mom heard him say to himself:

"All right already! I want to be King!"

It is 6:30 p.m. Friday at Mt. Lebanon High School. It's Homecoming Weekend, and Robert and the other members of the elected Homecoming Court are gathering in a parking lot above the football field. There are six boys and five girls. They wear suits and dresses and smile at each other and giggle.

Robert stands among them, as if he were any other kid. He keeps putting his hands in his pockets, and his parents, Valerie and Robert Demsky, keep motioning for him to take them out.

Robert obeys. Then forgets. Repeatedly. His parents shake their heads, but they persist.

They always have because you don't give up on this.

It's time to go, and school officials begin the parade. They enter the stadium: freshman class leaders first, then the sophomores, juniors and seniors, and finally Robert and the rest of the Court. The crowd sees Robert, smiling as always. People shout his name, and Robert gives a thumbs-up.

In the stands, Valerie and Robert sit at the 50-yard line.

Valerie got the call earlier in the week, after the ballots had been counted. She was alone in her office, and when she heard the news, she cried.

She cried because from the Kiski Junction adapts to coal downturn

TRAIN • FROM C1

“What’s great about the Kiski Junction, even though they have been hit commercially, they are still able to jump into tourism and show off some of the county’s great assets like the river,” he said.

Reddinger credits the railroad’s tourism success to a dozen volunteers including engineers, conductors, car hosts and even the ticket agent.

Business shrinking, but surviving

The cheery red rail cars pulled by a classic diesel switch locomotive are a shiny beacon in the Schenley Industrial Park, the last commercial vestige in a long string of tidy river camps and multiplying boat slips along the lower Kiski River and near its confluence with the Allegheny.

But the short line owes its long-term survival to commercial freight. It only began offering tours in 1996.

Short lines like the Kiski Railroad that haul commercial freight “are still an incredibly important part of our U.S. freight rail system with one of every four carloads touching a short line in origin or destination,” said Amy Krouse, spokeswoman for the American Short Line and Regional Railroad Association in Washington, D.C.

Pennsylvania is home to 51 short lines, the highest density of any state in the country, according to the association’s 2014 guide.

While it primarily hauled steel scrap from ATI’s Bagdad plant, the railroad was purchased in 2006 by Cliff Forest, who owns Rosebud Mining to haul coal from its Logansport mine in Bethel. Although owned by Forest, the two companies operate independently.

The state awarded a $4.3 million state grant in 2010 for a nine-mile spur connecting the railroad’s base in Schenley to the mine in Bethel.

Bob Reddinger, supervisor of operations of the Kiski Junction Railroad, checks the engine’s head lamp while performing routine maintenance.

The downturn in the coal market has eliminated hauling by rail from the Logansport mine, at least for the moment, according to Reddinger.

The business from Allegheny Technologies Inc.’s Bagdad plant hauling scrap dried up earlier this year because of falling steel prices and a flood of cheap imports, which the industry has blamed primarily on China.

“The future restart will depend upon future business conditions,” said Dan Greenfield, ATI spokesman.

The railroad still has some commercial business. It transfers dry bulk goods from Norfolk Southern trains to Armstrong Terminal Inc., located at the former Schenley whiskey distillery. It’s a mere one-quarter mile jaunt but an integral one, as it’s the only way to move goods from the Norfolk Southern line to Armstrong terminals to a river barge or a trailer truck.

The short line and the terminal are both rarities: Armstrong Terminal is the only river terminal immediately north of Allegheny River Lock No. 5.

They are working with the Kiski Junction to transfer cattle feed supplement from Norfolk Southern, which it stores and distributes by trucks to animal feed mills and to farms, according to Sam Lansberry, controller with Armstrong Terminal Inc. The terminal also has facilities to bag goods.

The terminal handles anthracite coal it receives by rail via the Kiski Junction Railroad, which is eventually loaded onto barges for steel mills along the Ohio and Mississippi rivers, he said.

Reddinger is looking into more freight traffic.

rates to rise on individuals making $400,000 or more and couples earning $450,000 or more. In a 2012 budget proposal, he proposed reducing spending to about 18 percent of GDP (it was about 20 percent in 2015), reducing all income tax rates, including lowering the top individual rate to 28 percent and the top corporate tax rate to 25 percent, while limiting unspecified tax breaks. The proposal also would have capped Medicaid spending and converted Medicare into a voucher-like program.

Gun rights

McGinty supports requiring background checks for online gun sales and purchases at gun shows, a ban on the sale of armor-piercing “cop killer” bullets, a ban on the manufacture and sale of “military-style” firearms, a ban on allowing people on the terrorist watch list to obtain a firearm, imposing a federal limit on magazine capacity and repealing a federal law that shields gun manufacturers from liability in cases where their weapons are used in crimes.

McGinty opposes federal reciprocity legislation to require every state to recognize and allow the use of concealed carry licenses or permits issued by other states.

Toomey voted to require background checks for online gun sales and purchases at gun shows. He voted against measures sponsored by Democrats to prevent a suspected terrorist from buying a firearm and in favor of bills sponsored by Republicans.

Toomey opposes restricting the sale of weapons, magazines and bullets. He supports federal reciprocity legislation.

Health care

McGinty supports the 2010 federal health care law, the Affordable Care Act.

Toomey voted to repeal the Affordable Care Act. He says he supports eliminating tax provisions that make it more expensive for individuals to buy insurance, requiring health plans to be portable and renewable and limiting the ability of people to sue medical professionals or institutions for damages from malpractice.

Immigration

McGinty supports a bipartisan immigration reform bill that passed the Senate in 2013 that would establish a path toward citizenship for an estimated 11 million immigrants living illegally in the United States and double aid for border security to stem the flow of immigrants who cross the border without legal permission. McGinty opposes Senate legislation barring federal funds from sanctuary cities, which are jurisdictions that resist turning over immigrants living in the country illegally to federal authorities.

Toomey opposes “amnesty” for immigrants in the country illegally and voted against the bipartisan immigration reform bill. Toomey supports a guest worker program and increasing spending on border security. Toomey says Donald Trump’s proposal to build a wall along the U.S.-Mexico border is simplistic and says Trump’s plan to deport every immigrant living illegally in the United States is not realistic. Toomey sponsored legislation barring federal funds from sanctuary cities.

Middle East

McGinty opposes the widespread use of ground troops in Syria and supports the Obama administration’s nuclear accord with Iran.

Toomey opposes the widespread use of ground troops in Syria and opposes the nuclear accord with Iran.

Social Security

McGinty opposes the diversion of Social Security payroll taxes into privately managed investment accounts and opposes raising the Social Security retirement age. McGinty supports raising the income limit for Social Security payroll taxes, currently $118,500, to improve the solvency of the Social Security trust fund.

Toomey has said he supported giving younger workers the option of taking a portion of the Social Security payroll tax they pay and putting it into a regulated, professionally managed account. Toomey has said raising the retirement age must be “on the table” to improve the solvency of the Social Security trust fund, but that people who are retired or are close to retirement must be unaffected by any changes. Toomey says he opposes raising the income limit for Social Security payroll taxes.

Supreme Court

McGinty was noncommittal on whether she would support Obama’s nominee, Merrick Garland, but she says he deserves Senate consideration.

Toomey did not support a vote on Garland’s nomination, saying Senate consideration of a nominee should wait until after the election. Toomey says he would be supportive of a Trump nominee to the Supreme Court.

University, added: “In a race as close as this one, both candidates will want to avoid making any gaffes that can light up social media or provide fodder for last-minute attack ads.”

McGinty, a Chester County Democrat, leads Toomey, a Lehigh Valley Republican who is completing his first term in the Senate, by just 0.4 percentage point, according to RealClearPolitics’ polling average.

The narrow gap has resulted in an avalanche of spending.

Through Friday, outside groups — political action committees, super PACs and nonprofit 501(c) organizations — had spent a combined $69 million on the race.

That’s the most among this year’s 34 Senate races, according to the Washington-based Center for Responsive Politics.

The candidates’ campaigns spent at least $16.4 million combined through June 30, according to federal records. McGinty said last week that her campaign raised an additional $5.2 million, and Toomey said his raised $5 million during the year’s third quarter.

Neither said how much they spent.

Candidates had through Saturday to file their third-quarter campaign finance reports with the Federal Election Commission.

In Monday’s debate, KDKA-TV anchor Ken Rice will be the moderator, and money and politics editor Jon Delano and reporter Lynne Hayes-Freeland will be panelists.

Each candidate will have a minute to answer each question, and their opponent will be given 30 seconds to respond. Candidates will be allowed to make closing statements.

Science Center explores how ‘BodyWorks’

Interactive exhibit allows guests of all ages to learn how humans function

BY PHILLIP POUPORE

Adelaide Pribis, 4, of Mars was surprised when her mother picked her up early from preschool Friday and took her to her favorite place: the Carnegie Science Center.

Adelaide was even more surprised to find that she was one of the first people to experience the science center’s newest exhibit on the human body.

“I really love it because it shows all of the bodies and how to figure stuff out,” Adelaide said as she assembled X-ray pictures of a skeleton. “I like to figure out the skeleton and what goes before the hand.”

Visitors to the third floor of the museum on Pittsburgh’s North Shore are now treated to “BodyWorks,” an interactive exhibit exploring the different aspects and functions of the human body. Some displays will provoke laughter and some are likely to make visitors squirm.

The idea for the exhibit first came about in early 2015, according to Dennis Bateman, the science center’s director of exhibits. He knew the human body was a popular subject not only because Western Pennsylvania is known for health care, but because the issues in the exhibit apply to everyone.

“We try to focus on regional assets so kids interested in science can stay in the area,” Bateman said. “Also, everyone’s interested in themselves and their own bodies. It’s very topical.”

In fact, Bateman still receives questions from visitors asking when the 2007 “Bodies... The Exhibition” will return. That exhibit required its own ticket, and guests observed fully dissected human bodies.

This exhibit displays different body parts separately, including lungs from a smoker and nonsmoker, a heart and even a brain.

The body parts were given to the science center by Gunther von Hagens’ Institute for Plastination, which preserves human body parts by engaging in a unique process von Hagen invented called plastination. According to Bateman, plastination involves replacing all of the liquid in the body with a plastic polymer. There’s a one-for-one replacement of every fiber, which results in an exact duplicate.

“There’s less shock value by using separate parts,” Bateman said. “I’ve seen a lot of people come in and say (disgustedly), ‘It’s a head!’ — but then they stop and look at it for five minutes.”

What makes this exhibit different is how interactive it is, according to Bateman. That’s something that Adelaide’s mom, Meredith Pribis, noticed.

“I think it’s extremely interactive, which is really good for her age group,” said Pribis, 36, of Mars. “There’s so much incorporated that kids can ask such a variety of questions based on how they feel.”

Bryce Turner, 11, had always wanted to go to the science center, and he finally got that chance on Saturday when his parents treated him for his birthday. To him, everything in the science center was new, but the “BodyWorks” exhibit was what really caught his attention.

“We were just learning about some of the names of body parts in science class,” said Turner, of New Brighton. “It’s interesting how all of this stuff can fit in our bodies.”

His favorite part of the exhibit was “Do Smells Trigger Memories?” — which involves pushing buttons that release different smells.

Bateman also pointed out that this exhibit is interesting because not everything is as it seems. He explained that some parts of the exhibit focus on ways to trick one’s brain.

One of these displays is “Can My Hand Fool My Brain?” which asks guests to place their hands on opposite sides of a coil. Visitors will find that telling the difference between what is hot and cold may not be that easy after all, Bateman said. Other displays include “What Does a Baby Look Like in the Womb?” and “What Do I Look Like Inside?”

The exhibit, which is presented by Allegheny Health Network, is permanent and something that all guests can enjoy, Bateman said.

ARSON • FROM C1

252 fires burned 1,819 acres, DCNR statistics show. Coming in second in both years were fires caused by debris burning, which accounted for a combined 218 fires over 460 acres.

The costs for extinguishing all fires statewide in those two years was about $722,000.

Between 2012 and 2015, 676 incendiary fires burned more than 6,000 acres of wildlands in the state, making it the second leading cause behind debris burning which caused 1,394 fires on 2,728 acres, statistics show.

Fire-extinguishing costs for those four years topped $2 million.

Wildland fires damage or destroy trees native to Pennsylvania — oak, cherry and red maple, all valuable hardwoods — along with mountain laurel, ferns and other wild plants; habitats for woodland creatures and structures such as cabins or homes.

region, fueled by mountain laurel or leaves, in contrast to wildfires in western states that usually consume entire trees.

Determining a cause essentially is a process of elimination, Vinski said. Fire inspectors walk the perimeter and examine patterns left behind by the flames, placing colored flags to mark points of the fire's progression.

“To do it correctly, it is extraordinarily time-consuming,” he said. “The sheer size of wildfires makes it a little more complex.”

Fighting the fire

Fighting a wildland fire — which are most common in the spring and fall — requires a different attack because of the tough terrain and lack of water.

Firefighters create a “break in the fuel,” clearing away twigs, leaves and other dry material in the fire’s path by digging a line in the ground with hand tools or heavy machinery, said David Planisek, a forester in the Forbes State Forest district. Landscape features, such as a road, stream or rocks, can act as a barrier, too, he said. Firefighters also use a bureau helicopter to drop water.

Weather is an important factor that can impact flames, as is wind direction and humidity, he said.

Afterward, firefighters “mop up,” or eliminate the possibility of a fire rekindling, by extinguishing any hot spots.

Manpower costs for state and local firefighters can be recovered through court-ordered restitution, if inspectors determine someone was at fault, Vinski said.

Costs range from $7 per hour per crew member to $25 per hour that a fire engine was in service.

Each year, Vinski trains about 20 departments in Allegheny, Somerset and Westmoreland counties on the basics of fighting wildland or brush fires. Those departments cover rural, forested areas with little infrastructure, such as the Laurel Mountain and Chestnut Ridge areas, he said.

When Fawn Township Volunteer Fire Department No. 1 got involved with training about 10 years ago, firefighters realized they were ill-equipped to battle wildland fires in the wooded Allegheny County community, said Dave Collings, deputy fire chief and state fire warden. The department began accumulating appropriate equipment, including a four-wheel drive engine and two brush trucks.

When they confronted a 10-acre brush fire last spring, firefighters knew what to do, Collings said.

game,” he said. “Your head’s constantly going in the middle of these things to decide what the proper attack is.”

Forest recovery

Prescribed forest burns conducted by the Forbes State Forest district promote the desirable tree species that have adapted and respond well to wildfires because of their thick bark and deep root systems, Planisek said. These controlled fires eliminate some trees — such as birches — that don’t hold up to the heat and flames, while oaks “respond with vigor” by resprouting and eventually overtaking less desirable varieties.

“We love to see them; we love to have them; we love to regrow them,” Planisek said. “Oak trees are extremely beneficial for timber and for wildlife.”

After a fire, officials address any erosion problems and may move woodland material on the ground back into its pre-fire location, Planisek said. Damaged trees will rebound.

“Typically, within a month of a fire, you’ll see really strong regrowth,” he said. “Mother Nature kind of takes care of itself in most cases.”

NOISY DEBATE

SHEFFIELD, Vt.

Once it was just another cabin on a Vermont hillside. Now it's an emblem in the debate over noise from the growing wind energy industry.

Studies have repeatedly found no evidence connecting noise from wind power turbines to human health problems. But critics question the soundness of those studies. Among them are Steve and Luann Therrien, who say a wind farm near their home made their lives hell.

The case has created a fissure among environmentalists in this liberal state with a reputation for green thinking, pitting those who see wind energy as key to reducing reliance on pollution-spewing fossil fuels against those convinced audible noises and inaudible "infrasound" present health threats to those living nearby. And each side questions the objectivity of the other's research.

The Therriens' old cabin is 5 miles of dirt road away from town, but just a quarter-mile from a rural stretch of Interstate 91. The highway noise largely didn't bother them.

But after the 16 turbine towers of the Sheffield Wind Project went up on a nearby ridgeline in 2011 — the closest about three-quarters of a mile away, and five within a mile — things changed, the Therriens say.

PHOTOS: AP

Steve and Luann Therrien abandoned their cabin in Sheffield, Vt., two years ago and say they have been unable to sell it.

Deep in the night, when things were quiet on the highway, a low hum came from the opposite direction, punctuated occasionally by louder noises, the Therriens say. Soon, they say, they and their two small children were plagued by sleeplessness, nausea and other problems.

"No scientific research has been able to demonstrate a direct cause-and-effect link between living near wind turbines, the noise they emit, and physiological health effects."

DR. HARRY CHEN

VERMONT'S HEALTH COMMISSIONER

"The vertigo was pretty much all the time, but if we had a lot of noise, the dry heaves would be more often," Luann Therrien said.

Steve Therrien gave up his job as a trash collector — too sleepy to drive, he said. They abandoned their home in 2014 and have been unable to sell it.

A group opposed to large-scale wind projects, Energize Vermont, is planning to set up sound-monitoring equipment at the Therriens' former home to try to document their concerns with data.

Vermont Gov. Peter Shumlin and fellow Democrats who control the Legislature have promoted renewable energy. Three big wind power projects — all of which have drawn complaints similar to the Therriens' — have been built on Vermont mountains during Shumlin's six years in office, with five more in planning or construction. The state is pursuing a goal of 90 percent renewable energy by 2050.

Luann Therrien said the couple has not sued turbine owners because they can't afford to hire a lawyer and have not found one willing to take the case for free.

But another person living near the Sheffield Project, Paul Brouha, has sued, saying the noise is "out of character with the surrounding area, is excessively loud and continues unabated for long periods of time both day and night."

BLOOMBERG

Vincent Wang needed new jeans and a coat just before classes began this semester at the University of California, Davis, where he studies nutrition. Rather than trek several miles off campus to the nearest Target or Wal-Mart, he ordered the clothes from Amazon.com and retrieved them from new Amazon pickup lockers right next to the university store that sells Aggies T-shirts and hoodies.

Wang, 21, is one of millions of students who have taken advantage of Amazon Prime Student, which offers all the benefits of a regular Prime membership — quick delivery, music and video streaming and free online photo storage — for $50 a year, half the regular price. Amazon's strategy echoes the one used for decades by the credit card companies: snag young consumers early and, with artful promotions, try to make them loyal for life.

The pickup lockers are just another way to pull students into the Amazon universe, giving them convenient locations to retrieve packages if they're worried about having merchandise sent to dorm rooms and apartments. The centrally located kiosks mean Amazon can offer same-day delivery of 3 million products on many campuses — faster than standard two-day delivery. The program catches students as they are forming new shopping habits, much like the Amazon program that woos new parents with discounted diapers.

"Even though it's just a dorm room, college students are setting up a new household for the first time and doing their own laundry and getting their own groceries," says Melanie Shreffler, senior insights director at the market research firm Cassandra. "Amazon steps in and plays the role of mom and dad for them in making sure they have what they need during this transition."

Amazon is expanding campus locations much more quickly than bookstores serving the general public. The company has two bookstores in Seattle and San Diego and two more on the way in Portland, Ore., and the Boston suburbs. By the end of the year, Amazon will have staffed pickup kiosks serving more than 500,000 college students at 16 schools around the country, including Purdue University, University of Massachusetts Amherst and the University of Pennsylvania. The expansion will continue next year, with Amazon targeting big schools with administrations receptive to kiosks that are meant to complement, not replace, the campus store, says Ripley MacDonald, who runs Amazon's student programs.

"On a college campus, you have all of your future customers in one place," he says. "We graduate students into full-price Prime memberships."

Amazon has used its Prime program to keep ahead of competition in e-commerce. It keeps increasing the value of membership by offering faster delivery services and additional entertainment options, locking in customers and

Trump's finances highlight legal, criticized practices

ASSOCIATED PRESS

Donald Trump's taxes still have many people scratching their heads: How did he incur such massive losses? What happened in other tax years? Is what he did legal? And how is this even possible?

The U.S. tax code is notoriously complex. But in general, federal income tax is progressive — those who earn less face lower taxes and those who earn more face higher taxes. There are many ways to legally reduce or even eliminate that tax burden.

A 2011 study from the nonpartisan Tax Policy Center found about 46 percent of Americans paid no federal income tax (it estimates 44 percent will not pay any this year). About half of those not paying federal income tax had no taxable income, while the other half took advantage of measures in the law that allow them to wipe out their tax liabilities.

The latter primarily benefit lower- and middle-income groups, thanks to things such as the earned income tax credit, child credits or education tax credits. However, many high-income individuals are also able to benefit

The Yuengling brewery in Pottsville, Pa.

Yuengling, the next generation

Pa. brewery made decades-long effort to keep it in the family

THE PHILADELPHIA INQUIRER

PHILADELPHIA — Now that Yuengling is the biggest-selling beer brand in Pennsylvania, Florida, Ohio and five smaller states, and fifth-generation owner Richard "Dick" Yuengling is on Forbes' list of billionaires, it's getting harder to remember that in the mid-1980s his was still a small-town brewery in the fabled but faded ex-coal-and-iron center of Pottsville, Pa., selling a few hundred kegs a day.

"I was told, when I was 19 or 20, that the brewery would fail and I should go somewhere else," Yuengling recalled, smiling. That's what most Pennsylvania breweries had done by then, crushed by national competition and Super Bowl marketing budgets.

"But we had a good brewmaster, good products, and I was never afraid to work and put the hours in," Yuengling says. "If you have that going for you and you believe in your company, and yourself, and what you're doing, and a lot of luck, you can make it work."

Only it wasn't quite that linear: Yuengling, now 73, left the company at age 30 after his father declined to update the works fast enough to suit him. He bought a beer distributorship and cultivated the agents who persuaded Pennsylvania

LEARNING TO SCARE

Who's lurking inside all those haunted attractions?

BY SHIRLEY MCMARLIN

Hundreds of seasonal workers playing ghosts, ghouls and goblins provide the thrills and chills that visitors expect from the area's haunted Halloween attractions.

But who exactly is jumping out of the cornstalks at those spooktacular sites? It might be your child's teacher, the state cop who gave you a ticket last week or even your company's IT guy.

Julie Schrader of Unity teaches English at an alternative-education school in Greensburg. Come October, she dons blood-covered white scrubs and gets buckled into a straitjacket and confronts visitors as they enter the pumpkin patch or wait for a hayride at Lonesome Valley Farms Valley of Terror in Mt. Pleasant Township.

"I'm usually the first character people see on the midway," she says. "My mouth is covered, so I can't talk. I sniff them and stare at them, and you'd be surprised how that creeps them out."

Schrader is one of 60 actors roaming the Valley of Terror's midway and a mile-long trail, says Jeff Johns, who owns and operates the farm with his wife Denise.

"We get everyone from state police to kids in high school," Johns says. "Some of them have theatrical training, but mostly we're just looking for people who really love the season, have high energy and like getting a rise out of people."

Johns says some scare workers have been there since the attraction opened 29 years ago and have brought friends and relatives on board. Many just drive in and ask about jobs.

Schrader's involvement was almost unavoidable. Her love of Halloween came from watching

ORIGINAL DESIGN CAN BE QUITE COMFORTABLE

JOHN CONTI
Architecture

Architects these days try to make many, if not most, of their buildings fit comfortably within their surroundings. And when they do so, it's often in ways that might not be readily apparent to most of us.

It's like those situations where we say we're certain we admire something, but we can't quite put our finger on the exact reason.

To illustrate that, here from around our area are five examples, older and newer, of how architects working with care and originality can make us comfortable with a building and its site in ways we may not notice. If you get a chance to walk by or visit one of these sites, take a moment to stop and look.

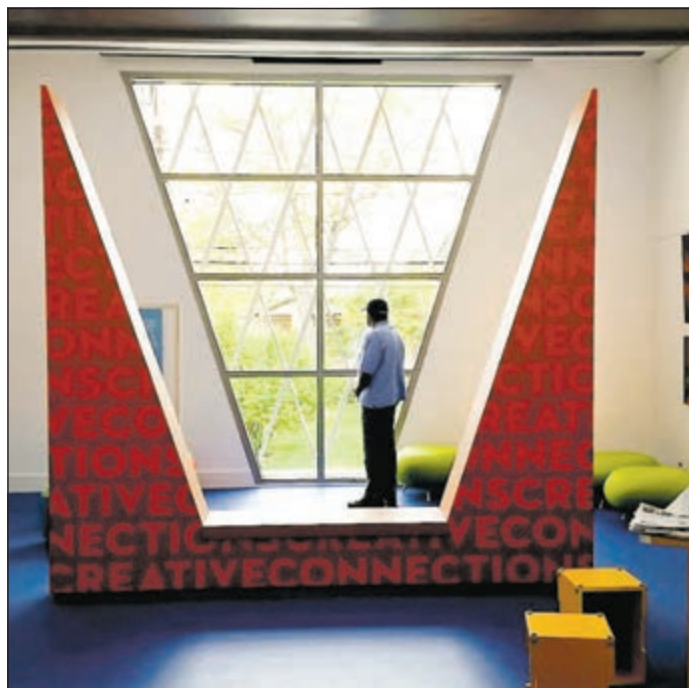

The "Black Box" at the museum: When the Carnegie Museums of Art and Natural History in Oakland filled in an interior courtyard to expand the natural history museum's dinosaur exhibits in 2009, it needed to find a new site outside to hold its trash-handling facilities, long hidden away in that courtyard. The only suitable space, though, was right where hundreds of visitors walk daily from the below-grade parking garage to the much-used rear entrance of the museums.

The solution of the architecture firm EDGE Studio (now GBBN) was to create an unobtrusive facility that looks a little like a black cube, with consistently black surface panels on two sides of the most obvious front part of the building, and translucent paneling on the rest. The translucent paneling is the part closest to the 1907 facade of the main building and matches its grayness, while the smooth, unadorned black metal panels, adjacent to the sidewalks and museum-goers, keep the building from calling attention to itself.

But if you stop to look carefully, you will see one further reason the design fits in so well — the black panels share the proportions of the dark red stone panels on the Scaife Galleries, a 1974 addition to the art museum by Edward Larrabee Barnes. The EDGE building is

In a nearly total renovation of the Westmoreland Museum of American Art recently, the architects added a new gallery that dramatically cantilevered out over the museum's hillside site. To help bring the old and new together, the architects then inserted doorways and windows at both ends of the building that reflect the angle of that new gallery's facade.

Installation art gives hints of other places

Artists create works you can walk into

BY KURT SHAW

Last fall, the Mattress Factory's ongoing exhibit series "Factory Installed" gave us Marnie Weber's "Ghost Train" in which a spooky cast of characters had pulled into the basement of the Mattress Factory, offering visitors a spooktacular site. Now, New York City-based artist Ezra Masch brings us "Stations," a multichannel video installation that replicates a ride on a subway train. It's one of four new "Factory Installed" exhibits that opened in late September.

"Stations" was created with cellphone footage shot simultaneously from 10 windows of a moving subway train in New York City. Together, they create a seemingly real-time experience of traveling on the subway system.

"I live in Manhattan, and I ride the subway every day," Masch says. "About a year ago, I started making drawings and video sketches on the train as a daily practice."

Masch filmed "Stations" earlier this year, at a time he says he couldn't afford a studio in New York. Working on the subway allowed him to continue making art, even if it was just little bits and pieces here and there.

"I recorded a lot of video through the windows of the train, and I became really interested in the blurred images and abstractions that happened as a result of the moving camera," he says.

For his installation, Masch asked people (mostly strangers) to shoot video with their cellphones from different windows of the train all at once. The result is a kind of fragmented moving panoramic image that changes along with the speed of the train and the depth of the shot.

The videos are projected onto the walls of the basement at equidistant intervals. The gaps in between the screens imply the space of the train's interior.

With this project, Masch says his goal was to use video in a sculptural way. In other words, by defining form through a relationship of moving images, Masch says, "I hope to create an immersive audio-visual experience that will transport the viewer to another space."

Upstairs, on the museum's second and third floors, visitors are privy to a variety of installation art experiences, from Chicago artist Christopher Meerdo's compilation of police officer body-camera chase videos titled "Active Denial System," to the barbed-wire-encircled piece "The Great Illusion" by Mohammed Musallam, an artist who lives and works in Gaza as a lecturer at the College of Arts, Al Aqsa University.

Musallam's installation expresses the reality of life in Gaza, where he says he lives alongside two million other Palestinians on "a very small piece (of land), just a 360-kilometer square" under occupation from a crippling blockade for the past 10 years.

"There is a lot of difficulties in our life in Gaza," Musallam says. "For example, we have only six hours of electricity a day and two or three hours of running water a week."

Musallam says the most difficult thing though, is traveling out of Gaza. "When anyone from Gaza wants to travel abroad, they can only within three conditions," he says. "The first (is) to be a university student studying abroad, secondly to carry a foreign passport in addition to his Palestinian passport and third, in critical medical conditions that require surgery abroad."

Anyone who lives in Gaza who wishes to travel under these conditions must register with the Interior Ministry of Hamas, and then wait for their turn to travel. Musallam says it usually takes one year a minimum, "because the crossing opens every three or four months for a few days only."

"I still recall how I waited a whole year to leave Gaza to Cairo to complete my Ph.D. This is the complexities of travel in Gaza that I try to express in my installation," he says.

To that end, Musallam has delineated a large rectangular area of the floor of one gallery with olive leaves surrounded by barbed wire. In the barbed wire are ripped pages from a passport, each filled with passport stamps.

"The Oslo peace agreement is supposed to give us the freedom to travel, but the truth is completely different," Musallam says. "This passport is worth nothing and (does) not give us the most basic rights to travel just like any other human beings."

Musallam says the olive leaf is very symbolic in Palestinian culture. "It has a great significance to our roots in Palestine and our attachment to the land," he says. "It is also an important indication of peace, that we dream just like any other human beings."

Topping off the piece, passport covers folded in the form of a paper airplanes symbolize "the dream of flight and freedom."

"I believe that the passport is a dirty political tool to differentiate between humans and allow only some people to pass through while rejecting others," Musallam says. "The value of humans today (is) determined by their passport. It is very sad."

Then there is the work of Stephen Bram of Melbourne, Australia. His piece "Third floor West gallery 500 Sampsonia Way" is a work you can walk into.

"I want to give the viewer maximum freedom in interpreting the work but, at the same time, refer to something real and specific," Bram says of the piece, which is made of walls that slant and meet the visitor at every turn. "I try to do this by making abstract works in relation to points in real space."

Bram has been making works like this for the past 29 years, and he says, "In the course of this now 29-year project, I have made works in painting, film, sculpture, photography and architecture or something like it."

"All of the works refer to specific points in space — and in a sense they all refer to the same points and each other," he says. "A bit specialized I know, but that is what I do."

Sunday afternoon visitors to the Carnegie Museums take no notice of the museums' trash handling facility (at left) as they walk to the entrance that's nearest to parking. The architects used color, materials and proportions to make the facility unobtrusive.

Originality in design can be comforting different from both the 1907 building and the 1970s addition, but it deliberately avoids asserting itself by complementing both the new and the old architecture that it's near:

Fitting-in with Frick's woods: Architects at the local office of Bohlin Cywinski Jackson did something similar to the rear facade of the new Environmental Center at Frick Park, which opened last month. This building is set low on a hillside that slopes toward the deep woods of the park's nature preserve behind it. In order to obtrude as little as possible into one of the park's main entranceways, it's one story at the front and three at the back. That's to be expected.

But when you go to the rear — where the trails lead into the dense woods — if you look back at the three-story facade, you see something very sophisticated and out of the ordinary. The building's tall and thin columns and its windows are not arranged in any regular pattern. The placement of columns, windows and wood paneling is meant to look random — just as trees standing in the woods are random. This is a subtle difference, but a telling one that helps bring this fine new building into harmony with the woods behind it.

The rear facade of the new Environmental Center at Frick Park has columns, windows and wood paneling arranged in a seemingly random way, a design that reflects the random placement of trees in the woods behind the Center.

Holding skyscrapers down to size: Two big Downtown Pittsburgh blurring projects from the 1980s — PPG Place and EQT Plaza on Liberty Avenue were especially planned to respect their neighbors. At PPG Place, famous architect Philip Johnson and partner John Burgee conceived a 40-story office tower and five lower buildings, four of them just six stories high. These four lower buildings bring the scale of the project down closer to the low-rise buildings around Market Square. This eliminated the feeling that you might otherwise have had if just one tall dominant building had been put up so close to the square.

At EQT, the New York firm of Kohn Pedersen Fox designed a building in three parts. There's the 32-story central tower, a connected 20-story section that matches the bulk of the Midtown Towers building on one side and, the best touch of all, a four-story wing that matches the height of Heinz Hall on the other side. Taking care to not overshadow a local landmark is an act of civility that is often lacking in new developments.

Instead of putting their 32-story building right up against Heinz Hall and its garden, the designers of EQT Plaza put a low, four-story section of the building at the side nearest the landmark. This helps keep the skyscraper from dominating the scene.

Bringing it all together: The Westmoreland Museum of American Art reopened a year ago this month after an extensive remodeling by Ernead Architects. The architects faced the problem of melding a large modern addition with a rather plain, vaguely Georgian older building. The addition features a dramatic modern gallery with a slanting face that cantilevered out over its hillside site above Greensburg. To bring the old and new together, one of the things they did was add more slanting features elsewhere on the building inside and out, with new interior doorways and windows reflecting the slanting angle of the addition.

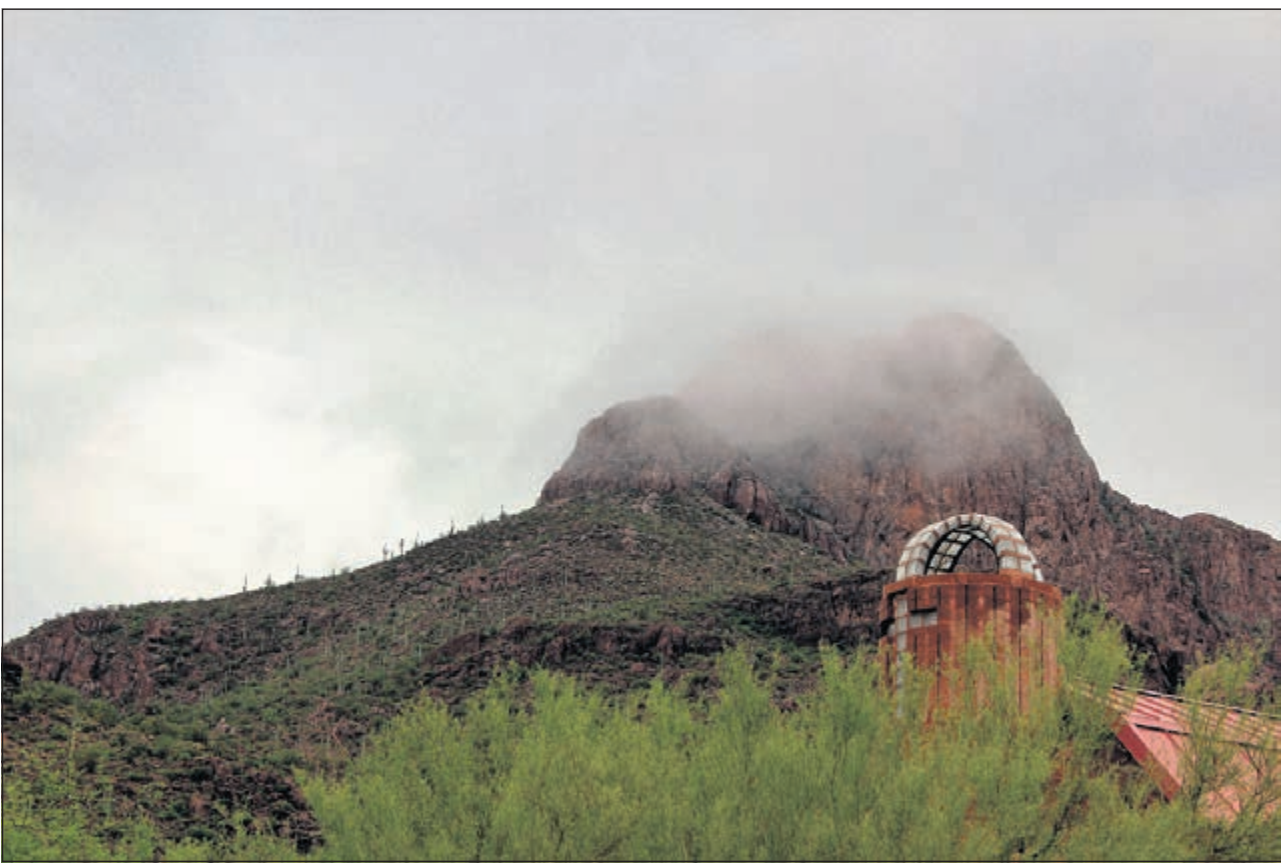

Architects have many tools they can use to manipulate how we feel about a building. But we often are not totally aware of just what it is that makes a building fit well with its site.

Arizona destination is place of peace

by MARK MITTELSTADT

MARANA, Ariz. — The distinct bell-shaped mountain rising above the Sonoran Desert northwest of Tucson holds a special power, say those who've spent time here — a magnetism that draws you in, sets you apart, even if only momentarily, from a difficult world, and perhaps even heals.

Named Safford Peak by early settlers, this protrusion of rock, scrub and cactus has beckoned visitors for centuries. For nearly 60 years, some of that land has been maintained as a place to hike the desert landscape, meditate, pray or take time out from life.

That mystique drew me and my wife, Mary, to Sanctuary Cove, a spiritual retreat on the western edge of Marana, a sprawling Tucson suburb. We stayed at the property's guest cottage, a small, modern structure with amazing views across the Tucson Basin from the front and a large patio in back jutting into the mountain desert.

Sanctuary Cove's website describes its mission as "providing a natural place of peace and unspoiled beauty" offering an opportunity to "draw apart" from the intensity of today's hectic lifestyle." An entrance sign reads, "A still place in a turning world."

That mission has roots in centuries past, when indigenous tribes were believed to have visited, used and traversed the area. Today the property is operated by All Creeds Brotherhood, a nonprofit founded by Elmer Staggs, a World War I veteran who went to Arizona in 1917 to recover from tuberculosis.

Over the years, activities have included memorial services, photo shoots, weddings and other events.

If You Go

Sanctuary Cove: 8001 N. Scenic Drive, Tucson; sanctuarycove.org or 520-744-2375. Free admission. Open daily sunrise to sunset year-round. Rental cottage rates vary by season. Easy to moderate hiking. Watch for thorns, rattlesnakes, heat.

In addition to a small chapel, an amphitheater that seats several hundred people hosts an annual, nondenominational Easter sunrise service.

A labyrinth, built from desert rocks by former caretakers Chuck Koesters and Annie Bunker, encourages visitors to clear their minds and absorb the desert's beauty as they walk the circular formation. Trails offer views of Tucson to the right and Marana below.

Inspirational signs dot the trails. "Happiness is not a state to arrive at, but a manner of traveling," reads one, a revised quote from early 1900s author

Margaret Lee Runbeck. The cottage sleeps three, with a modern bathroom and full kitchen. The 500-square-foot covered patio in back reaches into the scrub and cactus, a good place to barbecue, meditate, practice yoga or snooze in a hammock, all while enjoying panoramic views and wildlife.

"I've seen mountain lion, desert fox, deer, javelina, bobcat, rattlesnakes, tarantula, Gila monster, coyote, desert tortoise," caretaker Amy Langley said. "I've heard some bobcat screams that will scare the pants off you."

Sanctuary Cove is also home to many birds including turkey vultures, desert wrens, doves, Gambel's quail, owls and hummingbirds. On an early morning hike, I encountered a brown-tailed hawk dining on unlucky prey. The hawk grabbed its breakfast and flew to a rocky ledge.

But most visitors come for other reasons. "At the end of the day when the light is fading, when the sun's going down, the last light, it's just beautiful," Langley said.

No-fuss toppings make pizza easy as pie

CHICAGO TRIBUNE

At this point in the history of pizza, so many styles populate our pizzerias, delivery boxes, cookbooks and freezer cases that it doesn't surprise us to hear someone describe a new restaurant's pies as "Italian."

What? OK, it does surprise us, because, well, Naples, Italy. Where pizza was perfected. All pizza is, at its core, Italian.

But before we work ourselves up into a good rant, we're stepping down from the soapbox to take a moment to recognize this: The fact that someone would be compelled to differentiate a pizza by calling it Italian tells us that we have come to own pizza completely in this country. And that's a good thing. From Neapolitan to deep dish, there are so many options — giving us the freedom to set aside the double-zero flour for a night, stop dissecting the minutiae of authenticity and make something of our own invention.

salumi) to scatter on a humble pie you can throw together at home. On your favorite dough recipe, a store-bought dough or pre-baked crust, you decide. (Don't have a go-to dough? We're including a recipe from "Truly Madly Pizza" by Suzanne Lenzer, because we love its simplicity. Buzz in the food processor and go.)

Each idea uses just three to four ingredients and makes enough for a 10- to 12-inch pizza. The topping recipes are free-form. Really love olives? Go ahead, throw on more for the creamy and crunchy pizza. If your dough makes a larger pie, simply up the amounts of ingredients.

To bake, crank your oven to 550; use a pizza stone or a baking sheet — it's up to you. And time the pizza according to your dough recipe, though we give times assuming a relatively thin crust.

And there you are, in six to 10 minutes, contributing to the continued history of pizza.

These topping recipes are designed to be thrown onto your pizza with little preparation.

Something quick. Something easy. Because sometimes, all we really want is dinner.

So, in that vein, today we're offering three no-fuss topping recipes (hardly any precooking and no tracking down of artisan 'nduja, not that we don't love artisan

In her book "Truly Madly Pizza," Suzanne Lenzer calls this recipe "my go-to, tried-and-true, know-by-heart pizza dough." She advocates freezing the dough then letting it rise slowly in the fridge on the day you plan to bake. We understand her reasoning, but the extra step of freezing slows us down. We had good results letting the dough slow-rise in the fridge instead. Overnight works, but the easiest option: Make the dough in the morning, pop into the fridge, and it's ready to go post-work.

2 3/4 cups (390 grams) bread flour
2 1/2 teaspoons (1/4 ounce) active dry yeast
2 teaspoons sea salt
1/4 cup extra-virgin olive oil
1 cup warm water
2 to 3 tablespoons medium or coarse cornmeal

Mix: Combine the flour, yeast and salt in a food processor fitted with the metal S-blade. Turn the machine on. Add the oil through the feed tube, then add the water in a slow, steady stream. By adding the water slowly, you can watch the dough come together, and you'll get a sense of whether you should add more or whether it's too wet — it should look pliable and smooth after a minute or so of processing. (The more water you can add and still be able to handle the dough without it sticking to your hands, the better it will be.) Continue to process the dough for about 2 minutes. The dough should form a ball and ride around in the processor. If it does become too wet, add another tablespoon or 2 of flour until it's moist to the touch but can be handled easily. When the dough is done, it should be soft, slightly sticky and elastic. It may also be hot from the machine, so be cautious.

Quick Pizza Dough

Fold: Lay a piece of plastic wrap about 12 inches long on a clean work surface. Use your hands to press the dough into a rectangle on the plastic, about 8- by 6-inches wide. Press your fingers into the top of the dough all over it, making indentations as though it were a focaccia. Fold the left third of the dough over and repeat the finger indentations. Fold the right third over (as you would a letter) and make indentations again. Cover the folded dough with plastic wrap; let rise 20 minutes.

Form: After 20 minutes, cut the dough in half, and form each into a neat ball. (Each ball will make a 10- to 12-inch round pizza.) You can use the dough right away, but you'll find the texture of the crust will be a bit breadier and the flavor less complex. For best results, freeze the dough (see next step), which retards the yeast's activity, allowing the flavor to continue to develop as the dough thaws, without letting it rise and become breadier. Or refrigerate the dough, up to 1 day. But if it is very warm or humid, the dough can expand relatively dramatically even in the fridge.

Freeze and thaw: Wrap each ball tightly in plastic wrap; freeze immediately after wrapping. The morning of the day you plan to make pizza, remove dough from freezer and put it into the fridge to slowly thaw (for 6 to 7 hours). Twenty to 30 minutes before making the pizza, pull the dough out of the fridge, and let it come to room temperature while you prep toppings.

Shape: Working with one dough ball at a time and working with your hands (not on a flat surface), gently begin to stretch the dough into a circular shape, pressing your fist into the center of the dough and pulling at the edges with your other hand. With both hands, stretch the dough, being careful not to tear it. Working in a circular motion, pull the thicker edges of the dough outward, letting gravity help you. Continue to stretch the dough until it's relatively even in thickness (the edges will be thicker, and that is OK) and you have the size you want.

Bake: Heat the oven to 550 degrees. If using a stone and a peel, put the stone in the oven to heat. Dust the peel generously with the cornmeal. Carefully lay shaped dough on the peel.

If using a baking sheet, brush a large baking sheet with olive oil, and sprinkle it with cornmeal. Place the shaped dough onto the pan.

Top the pizza as desired, and slide it off the peel and onto the heated stone, or slide the baking sheet into the oven. Bake until the crust is golden and the cheese is bubbling, for 6 to 10 minutes.

Makes two 10- to 12-inch pizzas.

Salty and Tangy Pizza

1/4 cup pesto, jarred or homemade, see note
 1 thin pizza crust (10 to 12 inches)
 1 cup red cherry tomatoes, sliced in half
 4 ounces fresh mozzarella, torn into bite-size pieces (or sliced in half if using small mozzarella balls)
 Salt, to taste

Heat the oven to 550 degrees. Spread the pesto over the pizza, leaving a 1-inch edge. Toss the tomatoes and mozzarella in a bowl with salt; scatter them over the pizza. Bake for 6 to 10 minutes.
Note: To make pesto, drop 3 cloves of garlic in a food processor with the motor running. Chop finely. Scrape down the sides of the bowl. Add 1/4 cup toasted pine nuts; process until chopped. Scrape down the sides. Add about 6 cups fresh basil leaves. Process until finely chopped. With the motor running, slowly pour in extra-virgin olive oil until you achieve a loose paste. Stir in 1/2 teaspoon coarse salt and about 1/2 cup freshly grated parmesan. Taste for seasoning. Makes about 1 cup.

Spicy and Sweet Pizza

Inspired by the Hellboy pizza at Paulie Gee's (originally of Brooklyn and now in Chicago's Logan Square, as well), which pairs spicy salumi (soppresata) with sweet/hot chile-infused honey.
 2 spicy Italian sausages, casings removed
 1/4 bunch (7 ounces) broccoli rabe, steamed until crisp tender, seasoned with salt, coarsely chopped
 1 thin pizza crust (10 to 12 inches)
 2 or 3 handfuls freshly grated parmesan
 Chile pepper-infused honey, such as Mike's Hot Honey

Heat the oven to 550 degrees. Cook the sausage in a skillet with a little olive oil until browned, breaking up sausage into rough pieces with a spatula as you go. Spread the broccoli rabe on the pizza crust; top with sausage. Scatter with the parmesan. Bake for 6 to 10 minutes. Drizzle with chile-infused honey immediately and serve.

Creamy and Crunchy Pizza

4 ounces blue cheese, crumbled
 1/2 cup Kalamata olives, pitted, cut in half
 Half a red onion, sliced in thin half moons about 1/4-inch thick
 1 thin pizza crust (10 to 12 inches)
 Heat the oven to 550 degrees. Scatter the cheese, olives and onions over the pizza crust, in that order. Bake for 6 to 10 minutes.

Take care window shopping

Question: In the very near future, I will be replacing five wood windows with new vinyl windows. The windows are your standard-sized bedroom windows — no fancy designs or dimensions.

I would like your recommendation on what brand names are reliable and have a good track record. When I ask around with builders and people connected to the window business, I can't seem to get a brand name that most people feel good about. Comments are made (positive and negative) about Marvin, Pella, Andersen, Sierra Pacific, etc. I also remember reading one of your columns where you expressed concerns about Pella windows.

— via email

Answer: To keep the record straight, Marvin and Sierra Pacific do not make vinyl windows. Marvin makes all-fiberglass (its Integrity line) and fiberglass/wood windows, while Sierra Pacific makes wood and aluminum-clad windows. Andersen and Pella offer vinyl windows.

My concern with Pella followed its steady refusal to honor its warranty on doors and windows a number of years ago. Pella fought my clients for months, blaming poor insulation, until the company was threatened with litigation after I became involved and wrote a scathing report.

I do not know if Pella has changed its modus operandi, but I have stayed away from recommending its products ever since. If a manufacturer does not honor its warranty, or offers terrible service, I feel that it does not deserve to be patronized.

My research and contacts in the industry speak highly of the Interstate Materials Inc. vinyl windows, series 88, which is only available through accredited retailers. To find a retailer in your area, call Interstate's toll-free line: 800-338-9997.

In recent years, I have had very good experiences with Marvin windows and doors. They are competitively priced, are of high quality and are very energy-efficient, and Marvin's customer service has been excellent.

Basement moisture

Q: I live in a home that has moisture year-round in the basement. It's causing the sill around the home to rot. Is it worth fixing? I still have a mortgage.

— via email

A: I certainly think that a house is worth fixing rather than abandoning it, if that is what you are asking.

Every effort should be made to track the causes of your extreme moisture condition.

Drop your clutter with a mudroom

Stow your stuff, show off your style

ASSOCIATED PRESS

Mudrooms have been a staple of large houses, especially in climates with plenty of rain and snow.

But increasingly, a mudroom has become a design essential even for apartment dwellers and those with small homes.

"Just like the kitchen has become so central to how everybody uses their home and lives their lives, a mudroom has become an expectation," says designer Vern Yip, an HGTV host and author of the new book "Vern Yip's Design Wise" (Running Press).

Interior designer Bennett Leifer agrees, and he often helps clients in New York City apartments create a proper mudroom.

"People try and find space where they can do that, whether they have a large family or whether it's just for themselves," Leifer says.

Some tips for designing a functional, durable and even stylish mudroom, even in the smallest of homes:

Analyze

"Think about how your family uses the space," Yip says, and be honest about how much clutter you're likely to create. People often want to see themselves as neater than they are, which leads them to create a mudroom entrance that is soon chaotic.

And those who'll want to charge the whole family's digital devices for easy grabbing when everyone leaves the house in the morning should put in counter space or shelves with plenty of power strips or electrical outlets nearby.

In your design, Yip advises, include about 10 to 15 percent more storage than you expect to need.

Your best 'drop zone'

The mudroom is your daily "drop zone," says designer Sarah Fishburne, director of trend and design for The Home Depot. So choose the mix of closed storage, hooks, shelves and countertops that serves your needs.

Custom built-in storage is popular in mudrooms, but there are many units available in a

Irises can span growing season

While the word iris may conjure an image of the stately German bearded iris whose large blooms grow from chunky, fleshy roots called rhizomes, there are many other types of irises that are well worth growing.

In fact, there are over 300 species of irises in the world, and many of them do quite well here in Pennsylvania gardens. If you cultivate the right mixture of species, you can have some type of iris blooming in your garden from very early in the spring until late in the autumn.

The first irises to bloom in the garden are the reticulated irises (Iris reticulata). These little guys grow from bulbs you plant in the fall, and they're often in bloom around the same time as the crocuses. They stand only 6 inches tall, but their bright yellow, blue, purple or white flowers are so cheery in the early spring. Plant a large drift of bulbs for the most impact, and avoid planting them in water-logged soils.

A few weeks later, the German bearded irises begin to bloom (I. germanica). These flashy flowers come in an incredible array of flower colors. From pink and purple to burgundy, yellow and orange, their floppy, paperlike flowers stand on stalks that are often over 2 feet tall. The strappy foliage looks great in the early garden, and if you choose re-blooming varieties, the plants will produce a second flush of flowers in the autumn. German bearded irises grow from rhizomes that are planted parallel to the soil, with the top half of the rhizome sticking up out of the soil.

Siberian irises bloom next (I. siberica). Their slender, grasslike foliage forms large

FIRST AID • FROM G1

much information, but here are a few hints: If your foundation is made of concrete blocks instead of poured concrete, and the blocks have been water-proofed from the inside, their cores may be filled with water that leaked in from the outside and became trapped in the cores.

In such a case, check the grade around the foundation and make all necessary repairs to it and to any appendages leading water toward the house (walks, patios, exterior basement stairs, driveways, low spot under a deck, etc.), and follow this with the drainage of the blocks.

You may need the help of an experienced contractor or engineer. Draining the blocks can be done by using a star drill and a hammer to drill holes in the mortar joints of the blocks as close to the floor as possible. Using an electric drill is dangerous; if water suddenly surges, it may cause a serious risk of electrical shock.

You will need to drill holes between blocks and in two or three places for each block, as some blocks have two cores and others three. You only need to drill holes in the bottom row; water will flow down to them.

You'll have to plan on dealing with the water coming out. If your house has an old stone foundation and a dirt floor, you will need to make sure that water cannot enter the basement by checking the conditions outside as mentioned above. Then you'll have to do something to control the soil's moisture by either covering it with heavy plastic, which you can buy in agricultural and building-supply stores, or by pouring a concrete slab over a stone base and vapor retarder.

When this is done, hire an experienced contractor to make any necessary repairs to the sill.

Send questions to Henri de Marne at First Aid for the Ailing House, Universal Uclick, 1130 Walnut St., Kansas City, MO 64106; or email henridemarne@gmavt.net.

Depp to part with colorful lair

HOT PROPERTY

Residences sit atop downtown L.A. building

LOS ANGELES TIMES

LOS ANGELES — After doubling down on his French village this year, Johnny Depp is ready to part with another piece of his exotic real estate portfolio.

The actor-producer-musician has listed his collection of residences atop the Eastern Columbia Building in downtown Los Angeles for sale at $12.78 million.

Depp's properties include five multi-floor penthouses within the art deco building, originally designed by Claud Beelman and modernized in 2007. The downtown landmark is distinguished by its exterior of teal terra cotta and gold-leaf tile and a four-sided clock tower that tops the 1930s structure.

TNS

Kept largely separate during the actor's ownership, the residences include multiple kitchens, living areas and lofted spaces decorated in a colorful, bohemian style. Perhaps more unusual than Depp's extensive art and furniture collection, one unit displays a framed Miami Dolphins jersey with a letter signed by Dan Marino.

The loft-style penthouses, which total about 11,500 square feet of space, were designed to function as individual rooms, each serving a particular purpose.

Terraces of various sizes invite outdoor entertaining and dining. The outdoor spaces as well as rows of steel-paneled windows take in sweeping downtown views.

The 53-year-old actor has been in sell mode of late but is hardly looking to sell short.

Earlier this year, Depp put his compound in Plan de la Tour, France, back on the market for around $55 million — double what he asked for the 47-acre Provencal village a year ago.

Known for his offbeat roles, Depp has starred in more than 50 major motion pictures, including "Edward Scissorhands," "Donnie Brasco" and the "Pirates of the Caribbean" films.

More recently, the actor starred in the fantasy flick "Alice Through the Looking Glass."

The penthouse listings also can be purchased individually.

Single-level plan full of visual appeal

ASSOCIATED DESIGNS

An intriguing angularity, combined with arched windows and brick detailing, draws eyes to the Norwich.

Cedar shakes, corner quoins and small sections of lap siding add to the visual appeal. This single-level plan can be adapted for wheelchair accessibility.

Standing in the tiled entry, you face the kitchen, living room and dining room. The vaulted living room, with its richly glassed rear wall, is breathtaking. An entertainment center is on one side of the fireplace, while cabinets, shelves and a small sink fill the opposite space.

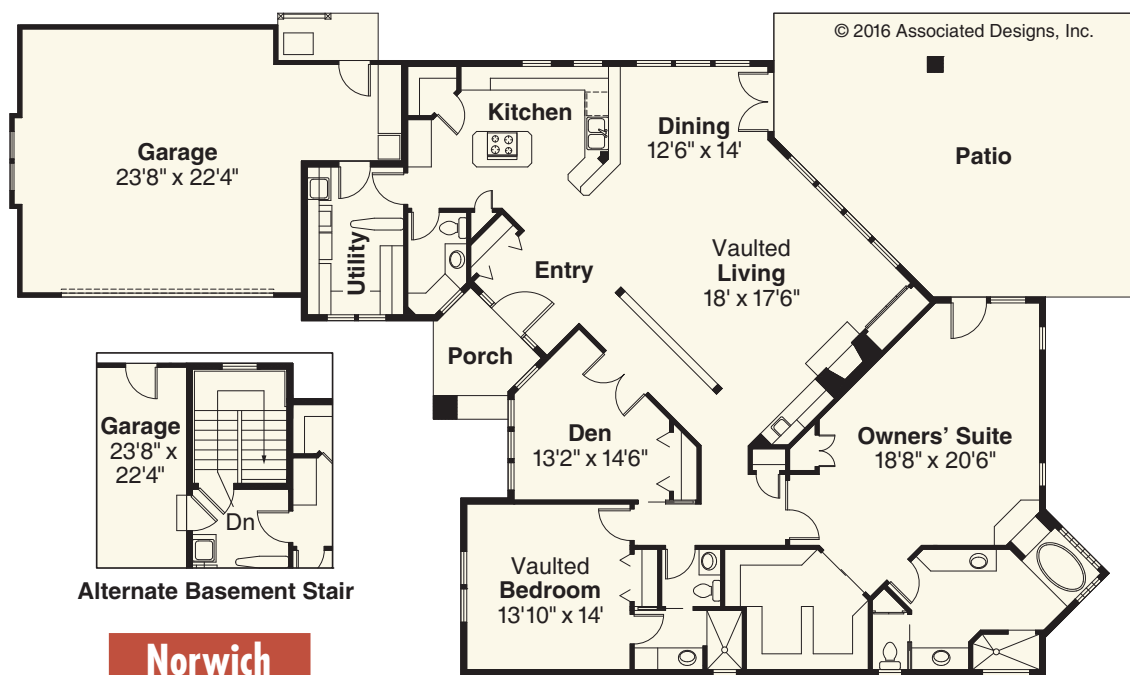

A raised eating bar provides partial separation between the kitchen and a dining room, and French doors swing open to access a partially covered patio brightened by skylights. Kitchen amenities include a step-in pantry, built-in appliances and a work island.

The small powder room and large, fully outfitted utility room are mere steps away. Linked to the garage, the utility room serves as a mudroom and a convenient place for unloading groceries.

Odd-angled walls and a coffered ceiling frame the majestic owners' suite. Its gas log fireplace can be enjoyed from either the spa tub or the bed/sitting area. Daylight shines through glass blocks illuminating the tub, and the huge closet provides storage space equal to three average-sized walk-ins.

A dramatic arched window graces the Norwich's other bedroom, which is vaulted and has direct access to a two-section bathroom.

French doors open into a room concealed by a 6-foot-high partition that bounds the living room. With tall windows opening toward clumps, and the plants are topped with blue, purple or white flowers in late spring. They bloom for a fairly brief period of time, but the plants alone are attractive additions to the landscape. Siberian irises reach about three feet in height.

My favorite irises are the next to bloom. These two species love waterlogged soils, so they're great for low-lying areas. But, I also grow them in my perennial garden, where it certainly isn't waterlogged, and they do just fine. I'm talking about the Louisiana iris (I. fulva) and the Japanese iris (I. ensata). The big, colorful, floppy flowers of these two species are so beautiful. The foliage is upright and broad, making quite a statement even when the plants aren't in flower. Japanese irises are the largest types I have in my garden, and when they're in flower, everyone asks about them.

Another iris that blooms in early summer is the Dutch iris (I. hollandica). You'd easily recognize them as the "florist iris" as they're often found in bouquets at flower shops. Dutch irises are grown from bulbs planted in the fall. Their blue or purple flowers are tall and straight, and the foliage is slender and strap-like. If you plan to grow Dutch iris in Pennsylvania, plant the bulbs in a protected site and mulch them with a layer of shredded leaves in the autumn.

If you've done a good job of selecting reblooming varieties of German bearded iris (such as "Immortality," "Autumn Tryst," "Sugar Blues" and "Clarence"), you'll get a final iris hurrah every autumn, with a second burst of blooms from these beautiful plants.

All these species of iris can be planted in the autumn, before the ground freezes, so it's not too late to get a jump start on next year's garden.

Mudroom offers a place to stow your stuff, show off a bit of style range of styles and prices.

Leifer points out that built-ins can work well in small or awkward spaces. He's seen Manhattan apartment dwellers build around a garbage chute or wall soffit in the service entrance to turn that space into a mudroom. Built-ins also offer stability: Unlike freestanding furniture, they can't be knocked over by kids rushing by with backpacks.

Open lockers and cubbies are popular, mimicking the style of an athletic locker room, but Yip tells clients that closed storage and hooks tucked away behind doors will help keep your mudroom from looking cluttered.

However you design your storage, delineate one vertical space for each family member.

Infusing your style

Other items that can "visually soften the space" and express your style include artwork (safely framed) and window treatments that don't extend to the floor, Yip says.

Leifer adds flooring to that list: Mudrooms need durable, water-friendly flooring but are great places to try bold colors or favorite patterns. He suggests FLOR carpet squares, which come in a range of designs and are easily washable or replaceable, or woven vinyl floor covering from the Swedish company Bolon.

And don't forget the ceiling: Consider dreamy cloud wallpaper or other whimsical styles, Leifer says, or go sophisticated with a high-end wall covering from Cole and Sons. The cost may be surprisingly reasonable if your mudroom isn't large.

One wall can be enough

or foyer space, these ideas can be pared down into an area just a few feet wide along one wall.

Start by delineating that section of wall visually with paint, wallpaper or tile. Or add board-and-batten paneling halfway up the wall, Fishburne says.

Once the area is marked, assign a narrow space within it for each family member. Add hooks, and a bench with cubbies or baskets underneath.

Longer commutes may be hazardous to your health

Researchers find many problems in those who travel more than 2 hours per day

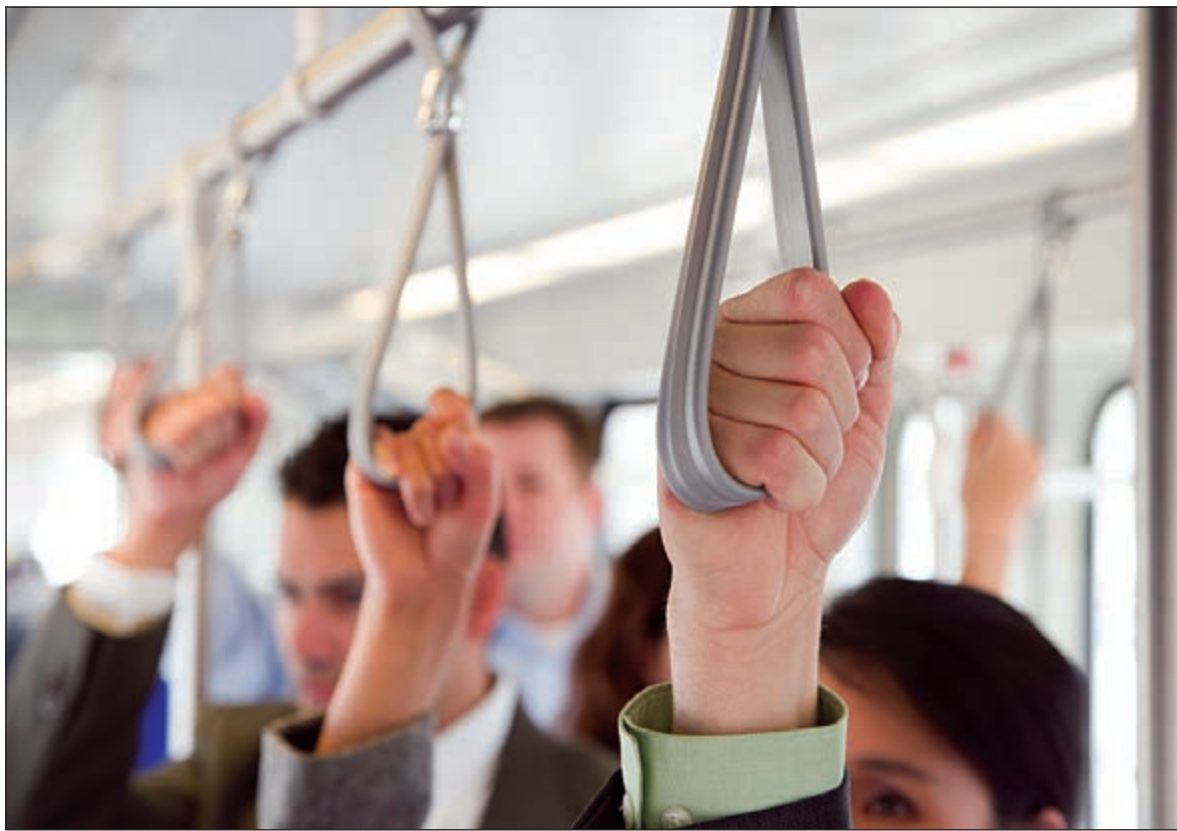

By Chris Gelbach
CTW FEATURES

When workers are weighing job opportunities, commute time is a major consideration. But in some cases, they might be underestimating the ramifications on overall health, wealth and happiness of a long trip each day.

According to the U.S. Census Bureau, the mean travel time to work is 25.7 minutes for American workers. But more than 10.8 million workers commute more than an hour each way for work, and more than 600,000 are "super commuters" that spend more than 90 minutes each way. A 2012 study from the NYU Rudin Center for Transportation found that the growth rates of super commuters is far outpacing the growth rate of the overall workforce in most of the nation's largest metropolitan areas.

"It seems to be a growing phenomenon in America," says Sarah Kaufman, assistant director at the NYU Rudin Center for Transportation. "People are often staying in their homes when either they cannot sell and move, or they choose not to, and so they are instead traveling long distances in order to work."

As a result, these workers are subjecting themselves to a plethora of negative life effects. Researcher Thomas J. Christian has associated overall commute times of 120 minutes a day or more with a decrease in time spent being physically active, preparing food, eating meals with family, sleeping, and spending time with family members and friends. Other studies have linked long commutes to everything from greater stress to obesity to back problems.

Additional research by Erika Sandow of Sweden's Umea University has even associated long commutes with a 40 percent increase in divorce and with early death in female workers. "Several studies show that longer commutes are psychologically problematic, and that's one piece to consider, as well," says Kaufman.

The Rudin Center's 2012 study of super commuters found that some employers are combating these negative effects by only making their long-commute employees come into the office a few times a week. When considering a job far away, securing this kind of flexibility from your potential employer can even be key to your long-term success in the role, since employers also see a negative correlation between retention rates and long commute times.

Remote work can also be a way for employers to level the playing field for underprivileged workers. A 2016 study from the Brookings Institution found that between 2000 and 2012, the number of jobs within the typical commute distance for residents in major metro areas fell by seven percent. Residents of high-poverty and majority-minority neighborhoods experienced particularly pronounced declines in job proximity.

Lower-income workers are also least likely to be able to afford the costs associated with car ownership, which a 2015 AAA study pegs at an average $8,698 annually for a vehicle driven 15,000 miles a year. This puts them at increased risk of unemployment living in low-transit areas. A 2015 study of New York City neighborhoods that Kaufman co-authored found that neighborhoods with insufficient transit access were linked to higher unemployment and lower median household incomes. "These are people with long commutes who need to take more than one subway, or the bus to the subway every morning to get to work," Kaufman says.

To address these gaps in transportation access and job opportunity, the study recommended a greater investment in informal transit such as web-based hailing technologies for shared rides, incremental improvements to existing transit, bus rapid transit to significantly speed commutes at a fraction of the cost of new subway lines, and incentives for workplaces to encourage remote work.

While the study was unique to New York City, its learnings could be applied to communities nationwide to improve transit access and job opportunity while reducing commute times. Recent technological advances can play a role in making it practical.

"The advantage we have in 2016 is that we have more access to data on where people are. We used to rely purely on the Census," Kaufman says. "But now we know where people are traveling and can access cell phone and traffic data in a way we never could before. We can really hone in on what people need in terms of things like bus routes and times and availability."

BOROUGH MANAGER
Indiana Borough, Indiana County, Pennsylvania is seeking candidates for the position of Borough Manager who can lead with a well-articulated vision, strong leadership, motivation and encouragement, and a desire to accomplish goals in a team setting.
 Indiana Borough serves a population of 15,000 with an annual budget of $11million and is home to Indiana University of Pennsylvania. The Manager reports to a twelve-member council through the Council President and Committees of Council. The Manager is responsible for the administration of the budget and finances and directs the work force of the Borough Administrative Office and the operational departments, including Planning; Code Enforcement; and, Public Works, which includes the Street Department, Waste Water Treatment Plant, and grounds and facility maintenance.
 The manager is the key to efficient and effective delivery of municipal services and will facilitate strategic plans, both short and long term. Important considerations include knowledge/experience in a municipal government setting; finance and budgeting; computer skills; human resource functions; staff management and supervision of municipal operations; parks and recreation; grant administration; and overall service delivery. Requirements include a minimum of a bachelor's degree in public administration or related field and experience within a municipal government structure. Excellent communication and interpersonal skills, and high personal integrity and ethical behavior are a must.
 Additional consideration will be given to candidates who display a commitment to continuous learning and professional growth and the desire and ability to lead the Borough in a positive direction by overseeing a multitude of projects in an effort to enhance the community.
 It is expected that the successful candidate will become a resident of the Indiana community. Salary is commensurate with qualifications and experience and excellent benefits are provided.
 Application can be made by submitting a letter of interest, resume, and salary history to:
Indiana Borough
Attn: Manager Search Committee
80 North 8th Street
Indiana, PA 15701
 A review process will commence October 20, 2016. Materials of interest are accepted until the position is filled.
Indiana Borough is an equal opportunity employer.

Really?

Did you know that of cancers affecting both men and women, colorectal cancer is the second leading cancer killer? But this is one cancer you can prevent. Get screened!

Screening tests help find polyps so they can be removed before they turn into cancer.

So, if you're 50 or older, do everything you can to prevent colorectal cancer. Screening really does save lives!

Fox does the 'Time Warp Again' with new 'Rocky Horror Picture Show'

ZAP2IT.COM

Thanks to a history-acknowledging conceit, a new version of "The Rocky Horror Picture Show" won't make you feel like you're in a time warp.

The original, stage-show-inspired 1975 film has gotten a workout on cable lately, but Fox debuts a new version Oct. 20. Not a live production but a movie, it doesn't pretend the earlier rendering doesn't exist, because — in a direct reference to the first picture's cult-classic status — an audience is shown on screen watching the remake and actively participating with such "Rocky Horror" essentials as water pistols, toilet paper and rice as it unspools.

The update includes a couple of vital

'The Rocky Horror Picture Show: Let's Do the Time Warp Again'

8 p.m. Oct. 20, Fox returnees: producer Lou Adler and co-star Tim Curry, alias Dr. Frank-N-Furter the first time and now the tale's narrating Criminologist. Laverne Cox ("Orange Is the New Black") succeeds Curry as the offbeat scientist, with Ryan McCartan ("Liv and Maddie") and Victoria Justice ("Victorious") following Barry Bostwick and Susan Sarandon as straitlaced couple Brad and Janet, stranded at a castle during a Transylvanian convention.

"Rocky Horror" always, in my particular case, had a mind of its own," Adler maintains. "It sounds a little corny, but I waited for it — which is, basically, the fans — to tell us what we do next. We started doing this television idea quite a while ago, and I guess it just wasn't the right time. Tim came along and validated it by wanting to be in it, and Kenny (Ortega, the remake's director) came along and could direct it to take it to another place, always keeping the fans in mind."

Curry says he "loved being there" for the new round's filming: "Kenny runs a very not-easy set, but a set where you really feel you can try anything. I remember quite a lot of the original film, as it was my first movie.

It was fun, though, to do it again."

The new "Rocky Horror" cast also includes Christina Milian, "American Idol" alum Adam Lambert, Annaleigh Ashford ("Masters of Sex"), Ivy Levan, Reeve Carney ("Penny Dreadful") and Staz Nair ("Game of Thrones").

With the enduring legend of "The Rocky Horror Picture Show," McCartan says, "This whole thing was very tricky for us as actors. We had a full month's rehearsal process ... not only to develop our characters, but also to make sure we were all on the same page about paying homage, rather than trying to trump or beat or best something that we all loved so much. There were a lot of beasts that we had to conquer."
